Lastly, the fact that Gov. Cellucci may be showing a willingness to reconsider and possibly change his mind with respect to Greenbush in the light of new and current evidence shows a courage that is not often seen in politicians, especially when the media supports an opposing point of view. The governor deserves an "A" for reason and effort here.

Improved and effective transportation has always been our common goal — an open mind is needed by all — whatever the means let's get this moving now!

Teen Center plans are on the fast track

Osgood yard sale funds aid the project

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Teen Center is close to becoming a reality and the yard sale last Saturday at the old Osgood school helped make that reality a little closer.

"We raised $1,528, which is excellent, and better than we thought we'd do," said recreation director Jack Worley, chairman of the Youth Resources Committee, which is spearheading efforts to turn the old DPW garage in the town parking lot into a teen center..

Despite temperatures in the triple-digits, Cohasset residents came out in force to purchase old student desks, teachers' desks, chairs, and tables, momentos for many who once attended the old Osgood school.

"It was steady all day," Worley said of the turnout. "There were 20 people standing outside waiting to get in when I opened the doors at 8:30."

Worley said that the money raised from the Osgood sale would most likely go toward building a handicapped ramp and sidewalk. The handicapped ramp may be made of either wood or concrete, depending on cost estimates.

"We also have some electrical work to do as well as finishing the snack bar," Worley said.

To that end, Joe McElroy is lending his fundraising talents to the project. McElroy directed fundraising efforts for the Lightkeepers House project on Government Island and was struck by the dedication of two teenagers toward completing the teen center.

"This is the finest effort of teenagers taking initiative that I've ever seen," McElroy said of the work of Jami Butman and Anthony Bramblett. "I'm amazed that they've put it together as effectively as they have."

McElroy said he became involved because he knows the prodigious amount of work that comes with fundraising.

"I know how difficult these projects are," he said. Jami and Tony are leaving for college in six weeks and I just think it would be wonderful to get this done and have a ribbon-cutting ceremony before they leave. It would be great to let them see the fruits of their labor."

McElroy said a number of new groups have enlisted to help reach that goal.

"The elderly housing at 60 Elm St. is putting together a letter and we are grateful to them," he said. "VFW Post 9146 is also getting involved and will help coordinate volunteer efforts."

McElroy is sending a 1,000-piece mailing to residents who have exhibited a strong desire in the past to contribute to the betterment of Cohasset, as well as to parents of students in grades 7-12 and local businesses.

"We're in the home stretch," McElroy said.

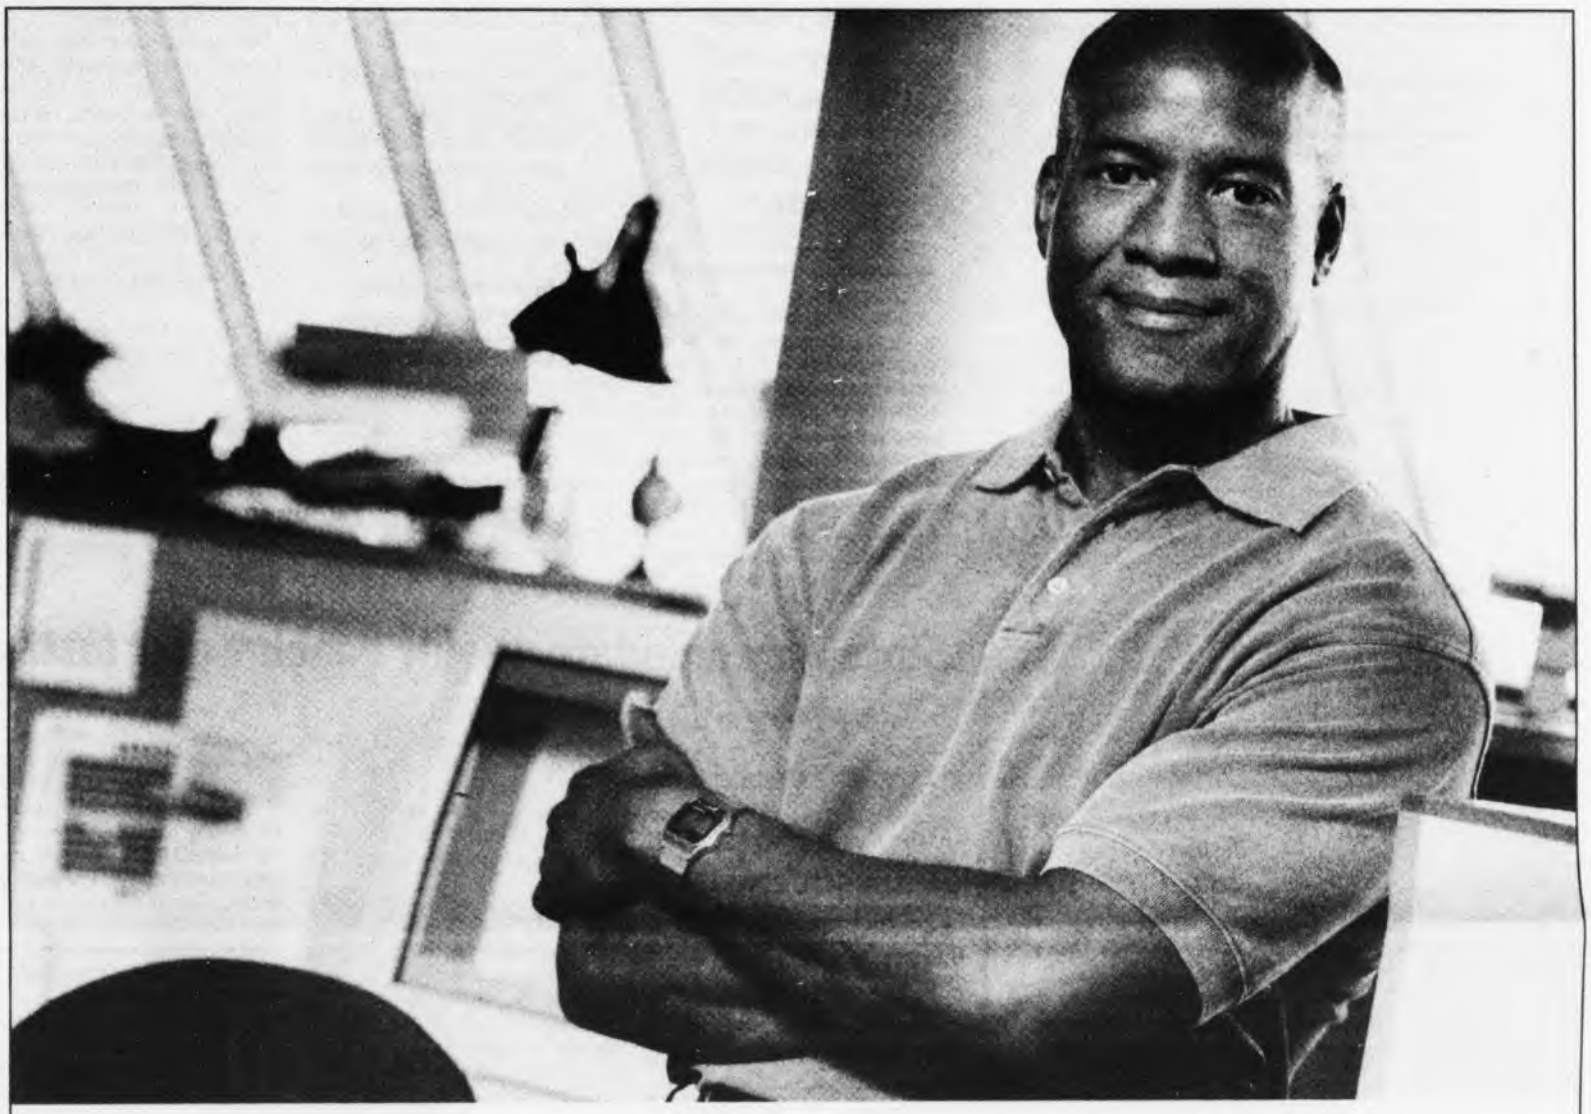
Helen Hawley performs on Cohasset Carillon

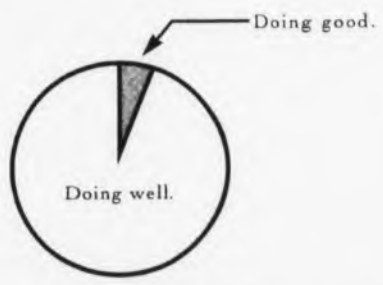
The fifth recital in the current 75th Anniversary summer carillon recital series will be presented by Helen Hawley Sunday, July 25, at 6 p.m. on the 57-bell Taylor carillon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset. Hawley's program will include original music for carillon by William Bender, Geo Clement and Ronald Barnes, as well as transcriptions from the works of Bach, Sor and Albeniz, and arrangements of familiar 19th century American songs by Stephen Foster and others.

The recital begins at 6 p.m. and is free of charge. It will take place rain or shine; in case of rain, listen from your parked cars. Printed programs, schedules of coming recitals and the new brochure describing the Cohasset Carillon will be distributed on the Cohasset Common and at the entrance to Stagecoach Way, the pedestrian walk beside Hunneman Realty on Main Street. A program stand containing all materials may be found on Highland Avenue at the entrance to the church courtyard. Listeners are invited to bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnic suppers to all listening locations. Following the recital, a tower tour will be offered to all interested persons.

For more information, call St. Stephen's Church at (781) 383-1083 weekdays between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., or phone the carillonneur of St. Stephen's, Sally Slade Warner, at (978) 475-2599; or the assistant carillonneur, Mary Kennedy, at (781) 383-9599.



Through our investment in Job Link, we've come to realize, some investments don't involve any risk at all.



Providing training to people with few or no job skills is the ongoing mission of Job Link. It's also the key reason why BankBoston has chosen to invest in this innovative employment agency with equity financing. With our help, Job Link expects to find employment for more than 25,000 people over the next five years throughout New England. BankBoston's Community Banking Group was the first to provide this kind of direct equity investment in low-income areas, focusing specifically on businesses owned by minorities and women. Officials focus upon education finance reform

Seeking coalitions with like-minded towns

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The lack of adequate state and federal funding for education in Cohasset has left the town's schools in a perilous position, and town officials are ready to do something about it.

"In general, we think there should be money for education that comes from broader-based state and federal taxes," said Selectman Thomas Callahan, who drafted a petition to be sent to Governor Cellucci, the state Senate, and the state House of Representatives, which focuses on the inadequate special education funding that many communities in Massachusetts receive.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that Cohasset has already received 66 responses to the petition and that Cohasset will wait until fall to send the petition, in order to allow other towns to have adequate time to respond.

"Massachusetts is way behind in funding special education which goes against its reputation as a special education leader," Callahan said. "What we have now is an underfunded state mandate and it puts great strain on our budget due to the inadequate spending.

"In Massachusetts, even so-called wealthier towns, such as Cohasset, can only raise taxes 2 1/2 percent. It's evident from override votes that people don't want to see their taxes increase a great deal more than that."

At issue is the amount of Chapter 70 aid which each town receives, which is the amount allocated to each town for education. The money is not distributed equally to each town, but is instead doled out based on a formula which takes into account such factors as a town's per-capita income and its property tax base.

Haddad said that while legislators may see Cohasset as a wealthy town, it only can raise taxes by 2 1/2 percent every fiscal year, and thus its tax base is not as great as others may perceive it to be.

"Proposition 2 1/2 set the limit the town can tax," he said. "If the town votes not to override at Town Meeting, then we have to cut the budget. People have to understand that we have a very limited tax base."

"Massachusetts is way behind in funding special education which goes against its reputation as a special education leader."
— Selectman Tom Callahan

Officials in the town of Ashland share similar fiscal concerns regarding education and has formed a new coalition of cities and towns called the Coalition for Policy Responsibility [CPR]. The coalition was the brainchild of Ashland's fiscal affairs committee, which claims that the Chapter 70 formula is misguided.

"The chapter 70 formula is incomprehensible, and just plain broken," said Craig Mathias an Ashland selectman and chairman of its fiscal affairs committee. "In Ashland, for example, we spend 75 percent of our budget on education and we still have needs in the schools that are going unmet, not to mention in the rest of the town."

Mathias pointed out that Ashland receives $896.22 per pupil from the state, while a town such as Lawrence receives $7,398 per student.

Cohasset, by comparison, receives $807.58 per student, ranking them 308 out of 351 cities and towns in Massachusetts regarding per-student aid from the state.

Mathias said that towns like Cohasset and Ashland need to focus on getting the state to devote more money to education as a whole, rather than haggling over which towns get more funding than others.

"We're trying to make the pie bigger, not take a bigger piece of the pie," he said. "No one's saying that Lawrence is getting too much money. Education just is not adequately funded in Massachusetts.

Mathias said that while Proposition 2 1/2 causes difficulty for town officials trying to get more money for education, it is a good piece of legislation which has many benefits aside from the difficulties that come when Chapter 70 is attached to it.

"In their infinite wisdom, the voters put 2 1/2 in place to keep property taxes down. Without 2 1/2, older people would be moving out due to increased property taxes and that would bring in more young families, which would only compound the problem."

Ashland is sponsoring a Forum on Education Alternatives on Sept. 25, which Callahan has said he will attend.

Mathias said that public relations activities will increase in the days and weeks leading up to the Forum and that a number of legislators had committed to be there.

"Education finance reform is a huge problem, and no one group is going to solve it alone," Haddad said. "We're ready to look at any and all petitions or groups that will move the process forward."

State may mandate weekly beach water testing

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

While town accountants are usually unnerved at the prospect of the state passing mandatory regulations which require testing, a new bill which has been sent to the state Joint Ways and Means Committee may actually save Cohasset a little bit of money if it is passed.

The so-called "Beaches Bill" "would require a statewide beach water testing policy for both coastal and inland beaches [during the bathing season] to ensure the safety of people using and enjoying Massachusetts waters," according to a statement by the Surfrider Foundation, an organization fighting for passage of the law.

The bill calls for weekly testing and would make it mandatory for board of health officials to post notification at beaches which test positive for contamination.

Passage of the bill with funding would actually save Cohasset money because the town already pays for weekly testing at all town beaches.

"In Cohasset, we test every Wednesday, and our beaches have always been safe," said board of health member Stephen Bobo. He noted that swimming is banned at levels above 200 colonies of fecal coliform per hundred milliliters of water and that all town beaches are free from pollution and that counts are below 5 at Bassings Beach, Sandy Beach, Sandy Cove, and Rocky Beach.

While Cohasset beaches seem incredibly safe, then, he said weekly testing is extremely important.

"The amount of pollution in the water can change by the day," he said. "On a heavy rain day, over 50 percent of our tests at Little Harbor may be over the safe swimming limit."

Bobo said that he sees mandatory statewide testing as a good idea because not all towns have beaches as safe as those in Cohasset.

"I know that there are real pollution problems in Weymouth, for instance," he said.

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) said that she likes the idea of mandatory testing so long as there is not a cost to the town.

"Obviously, it's a good idea to make sure the water is not polluted," Murray said upon hearing of the bill. "But I will not go for anything that will put any more costs to the town."

Bobo said that Cohasset pays for its own beach testing and was excited to hear that the state might be picking up the cost in the future.

"Our costs are not insignificant, probably around $100 a week," he said. "Our testing budget has been cut, so the state paying for this testing could help."

ISLAND LIVING

By incorporating a central island into a kitchen design, homeowners can keep the cooks in the family from getting in each other's way. An island can also be a real time-saver, particularly in kitchens with U-shaped layouts. Not every kitchen, however, can accommodate an island. If an island is squeezed into an area that is too small, it will amount to nothing more than an obstacle. According to the National Kitchen & Bath Association, there should be at least 42 inches between an island and the nearest countertop. That dimension should be expanded to 48 inches in a two-cook kitchen. As for the recommended walkway width between an island and a wall, it should be at least 36 inches.

Today's kitchen has evolved into a room in which to cook, dine, entertain and gather to discuss events at the end of the day. Make your kitchen a comfortable and beautiful place to be. THE DESIGNING WOMAN remains on the forefront of interior design techniques and can provide you with detailed recommendations on how to improve countertops, cabinets, flooring and window treatments. Our services include creating a design plan, scheduling deliveries, and supervising and coordinating the work of craftsmen. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.

Funds will be used to restore programs have to accept it," committee member Kathy Ofsthun said. "What we have to look at is who prioritizes between what programs get restored and decide if any donor can designate where the money goes."

The cuts to the school's budget were necessary because voters chose the lowest of three override proposals at the special override election in May, forcing the school committee to discontinue a number of programs.

Choosing which programs to restore is a contentious issue, but one that the school committee knows may be out of their hands.

"Some of the programs are going to be more popular than others in terms of the amount of people looking to restore them and we have to accept that from the get go," said school committee member Stephanie Noble.

"A world language teacher would be at the top of my list and a lot of the sports would be at the bottom, but, realistically, that's not how it's going to work out."

Indeed, a group wishing to restore a freshman boys basketball team was present at the meeting and ready to donate. The school committee set up guidelines at the meeting for those wishing to bring back sports teams eliminated by budget cuts.

"There needs to be an agreement on the amount of money needed for the program, and that money has to be in place," said chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "A sports program has to include everything, from a coach, to uniforms, to transportation, so we'll have to guess a little on the high side as far as the cost."

DeGiacomo was also quick to point out that in funding a sports team under the auspices of the schools, those funding that team would relinquish its control to the schools.

"Those restoring a team are restoring a program of the schools," he said. "They don't get to pick the coach or the uniforms."

School committee members were concerned about Title IX implications regarding restoring a boys' team versus a girls' team or vice versa, but Cohasset Middle High School principal Curtis Collins said those concerns were unfounded.

Title IX requires gender equity in interscholastic athletic opportunities, meaning that there cannot be a preponderance of teams of one gender and a lack of teams for the other gender.

"We've never had a problem with Title IX, and there will not be a problem if we bring back the programs I've heard mentioned in the rumor mill," he said. "We need to move ahead, not bring up red herrings for the future. It's a difficult enough issue as it is."

Collins echoed DeGiacomo's insistence that any restored programs will be under the jurisdiction of the schools.

"Some of the programs are going to be more popular than others in terms of the amount of people looking to restore them and we have to accept that from the get go."

—Stephanie Noble, school committee

"If it's going to be a school team, we want control over it," he said. "People want their kids playing in school programs, so control shouldn't be an issue. We accept their generosity with gratefulness."

A wrench was thrown into the discussion of accepting donations by DeGiacomo, who said that he would be less apt to restore a program under next year's budget if he knows there is a booster organization or other benefactor willing to fund that program.

"If we're looking at next year's budget and there's a group that wants to support freshman basketball, for instance, why would the school committee pay for it, especially when there are other programs nobody wants to pay for which may be just as important?" he said.

"I think people would be thrilled to pieces to have a program that doesn't use taxpayer money."

Noble agreed, saying that programs that have the wherewithal to acquire private funding would be low on her budgetary agenda.

"We should concentrate on funding programs that don't have boosters," she said.

School committee member Pat Martin disagreed with her fellow members, saying that support for the restoration of a program for one year doesn't guarantee that support for the following year.

"I would agree with that assumption if a group agreed to fund a program in year two," she said. "But I think we have to let people say no."

Edward Lappen, a contributor toward restoring the freshman boys' basketball team, said such a donation shouldn't relegate a program to a lower status when budgetary decisions are made the following year.

"It's simply wrong to say a program would be lower priority because it has a funding source," he said.

DeGiacomo lamented the fact that the state of education funding is such that the school committee had to discuss accepting donations at all.

"We're all chagrined that we have to be here talking about this," he said. "But we are where we are and the financial situation in town is not going to get a lot better."

The school committee agreed to steps those restoring a program would have to take to bring it back.

First, potential donors would work with Malvey to look at the cost of the program and the time in which the money would need to be raised. Malvey would then have the option of sending the donors to the alternative funding subcommittee if they needed fundraising help or ideas.

Finally, the proposal would be voted on by the school committee, and the program would be restored.

The supporters of restoring a freshman boys basketball team said they would see Malvey and the school committee could make an approval on that restoration at its Aug. 12 meeting.

"I'd like to give a big thank you to the boosters that are here tonight," Ofsthun said. "I know fundraising is a lot of work and paying for a team is a generous donation."

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

A great idea for those extra veggies

Downtown is a-bustle now, every Thursday, with the Farmer's Market in full swing — naturally, every week the produce gets more and more proficient, and the selection gets bigger and bigger. How lucky we are to be able to take advantage of such splendor! And, to be able to look forward to more and more to come!

With all of the fresh veggies available, may I suggest to you Garden Tomato Soup, an absolute must for a hot summer day, or anytime you have extra veggies! And, may I also tell you, people who are served this delectable dish will hound you until you share the recipe, it is that good!

Serve this with Mint Ice-Cream-Pie, and you have a menu to die for!

GARDEN TOMATO SOUP

4 large tomatoes
1 cup canned chicken broth
4 green onions chopped
1 small cucumber, thinly sliced
1/2 cup diced green pepper
1 cup canned tomato juice juice of 1 lemon
2 teaspoons granulated sugar
1 tablespoon seasoned salt
1/4 teaspoon seasoned pepper

Early in the day, dip each tomato into boiling water for about 1 minute, then into cold water for one minute. With paring knife, slip off skin; cut tomatoes into chunks.

In large saucepan, in chicken broth simmer green onions, cucumber slices, green pepper and tomatoes, covered, 5 mins. Add tomato juice, lemon juice, sugar, seasoned salt and seasoned pepper; simmer, covered, 10 minutes. Transfer to large bowl; cover; refrigerate. Serve in soup bowls (6 servings).

MINT ICE-CREAM PIE

Early in day, preheat oven to 375 degrees. Combine 3 tablespoons butter, softened, with 1-1/3 cups chocolate cookie crumbs. (About 18 to 24 cookies) until crumbly. Press into 9-inch pie plate. Bake 8 minutes; cool. Fill with mounds of mint ice-cream; freeze.

About 15 minutes before serving: Remove pie from freezer. Drizzle with chocolate sauce. Makes 8 servings.

HMS Rose returns to Hingham Shipyard

The "HMS" Rose, a magnificent, revolutionary war, tall ship will return to Hingham Shipyard Aug. 24 to 28.

Sponsored by Sea Chain Marine, the "HMS" Rose will be open for a public tour on Saturday, Aug. 28 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The "HMS" Rose crew will be on board to answer questions about the ship and the history she represents. Representatives from the International Knot Tying Society have been invited to demonstrate their art. A small fee of $2 per adult will be charged with the proceeds being donated to The Hingham Food Pantry.

The "HMS" Rose will host day sails for Hingham, Cohasset, Weymouth, and Boston middle school students on Aug. 25, 26, and 27. Any middle school student interested in participating on these four-hour day sails should contact Sea Chain Marine at (781) 749-2222.

During the evenings of the ship's visit, The South Shore Chamber of Commerce, The Medical Foundation, Southeastern Massachusetts Vision 2020 Task Force, and the South Shore Health and Educational Foundation will utilize the "HMS" Rose for networking and fund raising events.

"Last year, more than 600 people took part in the activities surrounding the arrival of the "HMS" Rose at the Hingham Shipyard," said Paul Trendowicz, president of Sea Chain Marine, "Signifying the 'reberth' of the Hingham Shipyard and our continued commitment to the Hingham and the surrounding communities, we take pride in providing this opportunity to invite our neighbors to view and enjoy this historical ship."

The "HMS" Rose is a replica of a mid-18th century Royal Naval frigate. The original "HMS" Rose was built in Hull, England in 1757 to fight in the Seven Years War. The ship was responsible for patrolling the coast and operating as a scout ship for the fleet.

Today's "HMS" Rose was built in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia in 1970 by Newport historian, John Fitzhugh Millar, using original construction drawings. In 1991, the "HMS" Rose was certified as America's first class-A size Sailing School Vessel by the U.S. Coast Guard, making her the largest Sailing School Vessel in the United States. The "HMS" Rose continues her educational mission today.

Lighthouse cruise into Massachusetts Bay

On Saturday, Aug. 7, the Boston Harbor Explorers will set sail from Rowes Wharf, Boston, on a six-hour adventure into Massachusetts Bay. Featured on the cruise will be 12 of North America's most beautiful and historic lighthouses. The narrated tour will travel out of Boston Harbor, up the coast past Nahant, Marblehead, Salem, Beverly and on to Gloucester. Then, the ship will travel to the South Shore, to the breathtaking Minot's Ledge Light off the shores of Cohasset.

Lighthouse stations featured on the tour will include: Boston Light, the oldest light station in North America; Minot's Ledge Light, the most dangerous station; Cape Ann Light Station, the only twin lights in America; Hospital Point Light, home to the commander of the 1st District of the U.S. Coast Guard; Graves Ledge Light, once the most powerful beacon in Boston Harbor; Bakers Island Light, where during the War of 1812 Keeper Perkins saved the U.S.F. Constitution from British attack; Long Island Head Light, mysteriously both first and last keeper died while on duty ... and much, much more!

Tickets are $30 adults, $26 seniors, $20 children and are available now by sending a check or money order to:

Boston Harbor Explorers, Inc., P.O. Box 690744, Quincy, MA 02269.

Or, call the Explorers at (617) 479-1871 for additional information. Boarding begins at Rowes Wharf at 9:30 a.m. sharp and the boat departs at 10 a.m., and returns at 4 p.m.

Holderness star Neely reaches perfection

By Barry McGurn
CORRESPONDENT

Late last November, as the Holderness girls' field hockey team was making its last minute preparations for its NEPSAC Class C Championship game against Kimble Union Academy at Holy Cross in Worcester, Holderness captain Neely Wakeman realized something wasn't right.

She didn't feel right, didn't feel focused.

So the Cohasset native grabbed coach Marty Elkins and asked for help.

She told her coach, as she had done before, that she wasn't focused. The two then walked away from the team and strolled the length of the field. Elkins had her senior star visualize herself on the field, doing the things she needed to do to help her team win.

"And when we got back to the bench," explained Elkins. "(Neely) said 'Okay, I'm ready.'"

Apparently that was what Neely Wakeman needed that night. Wakeman proceeded to go out, scoring the games' lone goal in the first half, then helped her team defend against an offensively potent Kimble Union team in holding on for an unlikely 1-0 championship game victory.

"She has a funny quality of humility and grace and power," said Elkins slowly but very deliberately nearly ten seconds after she was asked to describe what makes this 18-year old athlete so special. "She's a good athlete. She's always been in good physical condition. But what she does - that I have found rare - is she actually works on the mental part of the game. She works on visualization. She works on mental ways of inspiring either herself to better play or her teammates to better play and she knows when things aren't right with herself."

Elkins offered this example: Wakeman would wave for a substitution, say she needed three minutes, have a drink of water and refocus.

"You could see her," marveled Elkins, who coached Wakeman all four years in field hockey at the private Plymouth, N.H., high school. "She just kind of goes into a zone, gets her head back and re-focuses for where she needs to go and what she needs to do for the team and then goes back out and does that.

"That's a remarkable thing. She's very much in a sort of intellectual, emotional control as an athlete."

"That's a remarkable thing. She's very much in a sort of intellectual, emotional control as an athlete."

On her own

Neely Wakeman said she always knew she wanted to go away to school. She attended Derby Academy, a private school in Hingham, before going away to New Hampshire for four years.

"I think my parents were probably a little against Holderness," said Wakeman. "Just because it's about 2 1/2-3 hours away, depending on traffic in Boston, whereas schools like Tabor and Middlesex were, like, an hour away. So, they had a little difficulty sending me away, but they were definitely excited when I got there. I was so happy to be there. I loved it. And I didn't really have any problems in terms of being homesick or anything."

Neely Wakeman receives the Webster Cup at the commencement exercises at Holderness School. Neely was the first athlete to receive 12 varsity letters at Holderness

So, that makes the usual first trip away from home - going away to college - no problem at all. Wakeman will attend Hobart William Smith in western, upstate Geneva, N.Y., in the fall. There she hopes to play field hockey and lacrosse, two of the three high school sports (ice hockey was the other) in which she was the first girl in school history to earn twelve varsity letters.

"She's going to be sorely missed here," admitted Paul Elkins, Marty's husband and Neely's lacrosse coach for her first three years in high school, before he took a year to attend graduate school. "It's really been a great experience to work with her."

At Holderness, Wakeman was a captain in all three sports her senior year and a captain in field hockey her junior year also, an unusual occurrence.

At graduation she received the Webster Cup, awarded for excellence in athletics and she was an honor roll student for four years. Next year, she hopes to study either psychology or pre-med in college.

"She's a superior athlete and a supremely dedicated athlete," said Paul Elkins, who also said he wasn't surprised to learn that Neely was working out while spending the summer in Martha's Vineyard. "Athletics have been a very important part of her life and she works real hard year-round to stay in shape. There's nobody who's in better shape, nobody who's more committed in the off-season or during the season."

"Tall and strong," was how Marty Elkins described Neely. "She's a very graceful athlete - long legs, long strides - but a strong upper body. She could easily whack the ball 60, 70 yards. So she was a key player on our corner play."

That's the first-half play that Neely scored on in delivering her

Kicking back on the track

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Is there anyone who makes a distance runner look more foolish than "The Kicker!" We of slow-twitch muscles know him well. He comes in many sizes and shapes. He may be the teammate who rattles off 65-second 400s while you're struggling to break 70.

He may run with you step for step through the first three miles of a 5,000-meter race, only to put the burners on the final 100 yards every time.

He may even be the friend you encouraged to take up distance running in the first place.

The Kicker, no matter what shape he takes, has that one weapon in his arsenal that you'd sell your soul for; raw, in-your-face speed. It's that burst of total energy he throws at you when the finish line comes into view on the horizon. And if you don't have that extra gear, there's not a thing you can do but try to catch a glimpse of The Kicker through the cloud of dust.

The Kicker, no matter what shape he takes, has that one weapon in his arsenal that you'd sell your soul for; raw, in-your-face speed.

Unfortunately, it's the poor slob who finishes second, not the guy back in eighth, ninth or 10th, who bears the brunt of The Kicker's wrath.

Say "hello" to the poor slob.

I've been able to fake my blinding 59-second 400-meter speed a number of times. Of course those I've outkicked at the finish had about as much leg speed as I did. And rest assured, that wasn't much.

My strategy entailed running hard in the middle and third-quarter of a race in hopes The Kicker would become just too leg weary to put up a fight at the finish.

I pushed hard up the hills. I threw in surges of 100 yards or so to put some daylight between myself and The Kicker. Short of foul play, I tried any and everything.

My results were mixed. Sometimes my strategy worked and The Kicker would fall off the pace. But he was there more often than not, 300 yards from the finish. Sitting and waiting patiently. And that meant trouble for me. Big trouble.

I had no choice but to make the first move.

He was still right there, oblivious that I had even switched to my sprinting mode.

I had no choice but to react to his switching of gears as best I could.

And I had no choice but to watch helplessly as he put a 10-second gap on me over the course of 200 yards.

So what do you get for your effort? Maybe a personal best for that particular distance. Maybe you wind up making the difference in a one-point dual-meet victory. But more importantly, you become a better runner. And that, my slow-twitch friends, is exciting.

So here's to you Kickers who played the road runner to my coyote. Whether you know it or not, you all played a part in making me a better runner.

Starting this Saturday, two popular running races hit Hull's summer sports scene.

The Nantasket Seaside Road Race returns Saturday, July 24, after a year's hiatus from the South Shore racing circuit. The four-mile race, one of the most scenic in the area, begins at Hull High School at 9 a.m. and follows a rolling course which passes Mariners Park and Spinnaker Island. Runners then loop throughout the hilly section of the course before retracing the route back to the high school and the finish line.

Filho Nizaldo was the last runner to capture the Seaside race. A native of Brazil, Nizaldo handled the hot, sticky conditions just fine in cruising to victory in 20 minutes, 9 seconds over a field of 420 runners. The course record of 19:48 was set by John Daly in 1993.

From road to sand, the second annual Jane's Chase for the Cure beach race is set for Aug. 12, beginning at 6:30 p.m. across from the Schooner's Restaurant. The 5K (3.1 miles) race, which drew 436 runners last year, is a simple out-and-back course on the wet, firm sand of Nantasket Beach.

Kingston's John Noland led from the start last year and won easily in 15:48.

The race is held in memory of Jane Chase, a popular Hull resident who died of melanoma in May of 1998. She worked in the dialysis unit of the Carney Hospital. Many of her fellow workers competed in the race last year.

More than $10,000 was raised for melanoma research in the event's debut.

Race director Jacqui Chase, Jane's aunt, said the number of runners far exceeded her expectations of 200 last year. "The race was 20 minutes late in starting because so many people wanted to get in," she said.

Jacqui Chase expects another big field this year and has already received more than 100 applications in the mail. The goal, she said, is to have a field of 600 runners on the starting line at race time.

Applications are coming in every day," Chase said. "I'm getting very anxious. It really comes down to the last week when everybody gets excited."

Neither race is lacking local sponsorship as a number of businesses have stepped forward to help each event.

For more information on the Jane Chase race, call 925-2268. Call race director Kristen Evans at 925-2720 for more information on the Seaside race, which is sponsored by the Hull Academic Support Coalition.

team's New England Prep School Athletic Council Class C championship over Kimble Union to complete what Wakeman herself named the "Revenge Tour."

In the quarterfinals, Holderness was losing with three minutes to go in regulation to Gould Academy. Holderness tied it up, then won it in the second overtime, 2-1. Gould Academy had knocked Holderness out of the tournament two years ago in a shootout. "Revenge Tour" begins.

In the semifinals, Holderness ousted the Bancroft school, 2-1. Bancroft had knocked Holderness out of the tournament the year before. "Revenge Tour" continues.

The Revenge Tour culminated with the 1-0 championship game thriller over Kimble Union, a team that had rolled over its first two opponents in the postseason (while Holderness had squeaked out two tight 2-1 victories) and the only team that had given Holderness a loss in its 13-1-1 season.

"When we lost that overtime game against K.U.A. for the league championship," remembered Marty Elkins. "(Neely) brought us together and said, 'No tears, hold your heads up. It was a great game and we're going to beat them later this season. You wait.'"

"She's an athlete that I certainly felt a symbiosis with in working with. I feel privileged to have had an athlete of her caliber. Just a young woman of her class. She's a very classy individual. She's been brought up the right way.

"I admire her. I respect her very much. Which is rare, I think, when you coach a high school athlete."

Sandell graduates from Nobles

Morgan Sandell

Headmaster Richard H. Baker announces that the following Cohasset residents graduated Wednesday, June 9, from Noble and Greenough School in Dedham:

Morgan Sandell, son of Jim and Nancy Sandell of Cohasset, plans to attend Trinity College of Connecticut in the fall. During his junior year, Sandell studied abroad for the spring semester at St. Stephen's School in Rome, Italy. While there, he studied art history, Italian history, and classical studies in addition to his regular subjects, and played soccer for a team that won the title of League Champions. During his four years at Nobles, Sandell volunteered at the Brantwood Camp as a counselor, working with underprivileged children, and he was a resident advisor for the five-day boarding community. He was an All-League varsity soccer player for all of his high school career at Nobles, as well as a two-year varsity squash player, and a four-year varsity lacrosse player.

Medeiros scholarship from BU

Robert Morgan III of Cohasset has been awarded a four-year, full-tuition scholarship to Boston University as part of the University's Cardinal Humberto Medeiros Scholarship Program. Morgan was one of 14 seniors from Catholic high schools in the Archdiocese of Boston chosen to receive this honor.

The Medeiros Scholarship Program, established in 1986, honors students from local Archdiocesan high schools for their academic achievement, demonstrated leadership skills, and contributions to their schools and communities. The Medeiros Scholars, who all ranked in the top 10 of their graduating classes, represent the most distinguished students in Boston's Archdiocesan schools.

With this year's recipients, Boston University has enrolled 211 Medeiros Scholars and contributed more than $13 million in scholarships to students of the Archdiocese. At the ceremony honoring the scholarship recipients, Cardinal Bernard Law, Boston University President Jon Westling and Chancellor John Silber presented the students with their awards.

Morgan is a 1999 graduate of Boston College High School. In high school, Morgan was a member of the National Honor Society and the spring track, cross-country and wrestling teams.

He is the son of Robert and Donna Morgan of Jerusalem Road.

The Medeiros Scholars were selected by a four-person committee that included representatives from Boston University and the Archdiocese of Boston.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Second graders review their year . . . in song!

The following is a song that was written by the second grade students in Mrs. Lauren Cook's and Mrs. Barbara Wells' classes at the Joseph Osgood School. The children reviewed their year and collaborated their ideas to write this song. The song was performed by the entire second grade at the school's annual Arbor Day Musical Performance June 9.

End of the Year Curriculum Song

(Sung to the tune of "Jeremiah was a Bullfrog")

Written by the students in Mrs. Cook's and Mrs. Wells' Second Grade Classes-1999

Refrain
Joy to the world
All the boys and girls
Joy to the boys and girls in second grade
Learning every day

New friends and old friends
Can be found in second grade
Reading aloud is important
It's for homework every day

Meeting new teachers is lots of fun
And so are assemblies
You make a lot of projects
For everyone to see

Refrain
Joy to the world
All the boys and girls
Joy to the boys and girls in second grade
Learning every day

The Vikings sailed the mighty seas
Looking for better land
They captured slaves wherever they went
And they settled in Newfoundland

The Wampanoag Indians
Lived in weetus by the sea
They helped the Pilgrims learn to farm
And there was harmony

Refrain
Joy to the world
All the boys and girls
Joy to the boys and girls in second grade
Learning every day

We learned a lot about weather
We see it every day
We danced the water cycle
In gym for days and days

The Thanksgiving feast is a special treat
We cook with friends all day
We eat the food and learn new songs
And at recess we all play

Refrain
Joy to the world
All the boys and girls
Joy to the boys and girls in second grade
Learning every day

Are a lot of fun
We all make mistakes, but that's okay
We are learning with every one

Cursive is important

We practice it everyday
By the end of the year we are experts
And we move on to third grade

Refrain
Joy to the world
All the boys and girls
Joy to the boys and girls in second grade
Learning every day

Joanne Ilacqua gives a relaxing facial at the Adamo Day Spa Retreat's recent open house on Stagecoach Way.

Village is home of Adamo Day Spa

Cohasset Village is the home of the new Adamo Day Spa Retreat. Offering the most updated treatments available; such as vichy shower, wet room for body treatments and massages, steam room, also skin care and cosmetics. There is a soothing lounge area for relaxation between treatments.

Owner and operator is Joanne Ilacqua. Ilacqua has been a licensed esthetician and massage therapist since 1983. She previously worked for Salon Capri, which was rated the "Best in Boston" by "Boston Magazine". She has been working for Rudolph Adamo for the last five years and has now expanded the services into a day spa retreat.

Individual services and varied packages are available. Reservations for private parties can be scheduled.

For more information, call 781-383-1550.

New PR director at Music Circus

Joyce Linehan recently joined the South Shore Music Circus and Cape Cod Melody Tent as director of public relations for the 1999 season.

Linehan has been working in the music business in Boston for more than 15 years, and has extensive experience in publicity, artist management, promotion and tour management. Recently, she spent five years as the senior director of Artists & Repertoire for Sub Pop Records, running the Boston office of the Seattle-based label.

Cancer liaison physician named

Cohasset resident Michael J. Anderson, MD, medical oncologist from Commonwealth Hematology-Oncology in Weymouth, recently received a three-year appointment as cancer liaison physician for the Hospital Cancer Program at South Shore Hospital. The Cancer Liaison Program is part of the Commission on Cancer of the American College of Surgeons.

Dr. Anderson joins a national network of more than 1,800 volunteer cancer liaison physicians who provide leadership and support to the approvals program and other commissions on cancer activities.

Dr. Anderson advises the cancer committee at South Shore Hospital and also volunteers for the American Cancer Society.

Established in 1922, the Commission on Cancer, which is composed of Fellows of the College and liaison members representing more than 37 other cancer-related organizations, has approved more than 1,480 cancer programs in institutions across the country.

For more information on the Cancer Liaison Program and the Commission on Cancer, call the Commission on Cancer at the American College of Surgeons, 633 N. Saint Clair St., Chicago, IL 60611, (312) 202-5085.

Strolling the square on Thursday nights

The Hingham Square businesses will stay open until 8 p.m. on Thursday evenings through August. During this time South Street from Central to Main will be closed off from traffic, and there will be community events for the family. Such events as "A Taste of Hingham," Create a Kite Night for Kids, Antique Appraisal Evening, Fashions of the Square and performances of local bands and groups are currently being scheduled.

"A Taste of Hingham" an event which local restaurants will offer samplings of their menus is scheduled during our Summerfest celebration on July 29 — mark your calendar.

OBITUARY

Robert H. Fesler

Robert H. Fesler, 88, of Scituate, formerly of Cohasset, died July 13 at South Shore Hospital. His greatest passions were art, architectural design, antiques, reading, singing at piano bars, music, golf and gardening. He was a member of the Cohasset Golf Club for 40 years, a director of the South Shore Arts Center and a Mason.

Born in Chicago in 1910, he attended the Art Institute of Chicago and was the third generation in his family involved in the shoe business. During his career, he designed men's shoes for Florsheim Shoe Company, was general merchandiser for all footwear and fashion accessories at both Montgomery Ward and Associated Merchandising Corporation, and vice-president of the Walk-Over Shoe Company. Because of his expertise in production, design and marketing, he was sought out by the U.S. government to assist Mexico, Central and South America in developing a shoe industry that could compete on the world market. During that time, he became proficient in Spanish and collected Mexican folk art. Reluctant to retire even in his 70s, he was the owner of Kit & Kaboodle gift shop and gallery in Cohasset.

Robert H. Fesler

He leaves his wife, Grethe (Jones); two sons, Robert Jr. of Dresden, Maine, and Doug of Anchorage, Alaska; one daughter, Laurie Sherman of Anacortes, Washington; and six grandchildren, Clarissa, Max, Kari, Lahde, Sunna and Turi.

A memorial service was held July 17 at Second Congregational Church in Cohasset.

Police status report for June

June was a typical summer month for the police department, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

"There were 12 arrests," he said. "Five were warrant arrests. Four arrests were for Possession of Class A substance with intent to distribute. Finally, two arrests were for motor vehicle violations and one was a Protective Custody."

There was one breaking and entering reported during the month of June, a business.

During the month the department issued 90 motor vehicle traffic citations for fines totaling $3,390. Additionally, during June the department issued 393 parking violations for fines totaling $8,185, Noonan said.

During June the Emergency Dispatch Center received 588 calls for service. Of those, 116 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

Special Officer Brian Curran successfully completed his training requirements last month.

On June 30, the police department issued "I.D. Checking Guide" pamphlets to businesses in Cohasset holding liquor licenses. The booklet is intended to assist vendors in determining the validity of drivers' licenses (all states) in an attempt to eliminate the sale of alcoholic beverages and tobacco to underage customers (see sample letter below).

ID CHECKING GUIDE

The Cohasset Police know that college students returning home from school for the summer and out-of-state vacationers will produce a variety of identification cards when purchasing alcoholic beverages, liquor or tobacco products.

In an effort to help merchants accurately inspect drivers' licenses and other out-of-state identification cards, the Cohasset Police and the Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee would like merchants to accept a 1999 "ID Checking Guide." The booklet is an important reference tool for determining what each particular state's driver's license should look like, thus helping to eliminate many of the crimes involving fraudulent, counterfeit and altered licenses.

Landfill plans assailed

State allows 20-day comment period

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Few issues elicit unanimous support from town officials in Cohasset. But all town officials are in agreement that the latest effort by the owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited landfill to reopen the dump is a threat to the safety and interests of the town. The CHL Negotiating Committee expressed the town's anger at CHL in a public release issued at Tuesday's board of selectmen meeting.

The text of the release says that the town has bargained in good faith with CHL on a final closure plan for more than a year, only to have company reverse its course without notice and attempt to reopen the facility. (For the full text of the release, see page 4). The CHL negotiating committee met with the selectmen in executive session on Tuesday night to discuss the reopening plan. After that meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad pointed out that the town had spent a great deal of time and money on negotiations with CHL without any end in sight.

"We've spent $185,000 on this project already, which doesn't count the time spent by town employees working on it," Haddad said.

Students monitor health of Little Harbor

Use summer to study town's pollution problem

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

When one thinks of summer and high school students, the usual thoughts come to mind: beaches, parties, and maybe a summer job at some retail outlet serving the finest in frozen yogurt. A number of Cohasset High School students, however, are causing people around town to rethink their preconceptions of teenagers on summer vacation.

In conjunction with the Cohasset Lobster Lab and Camp Dresser McKee (CDM), the town's contractor for the study of pollution in Little Harbor, a group of 40 students are helping to measure the water quality in a body of water where pollution has already been previously discovered.

"We talked about the importance of a clean watershed system in physical science and now we can see it in our own town."
— Alicia Laas, CHS junior

The students are working as paid interns under a $10,000 grant from the state Office of Environmental Affairs to collect and test water samples from selected sites in Little Harbor to help determine the levels of pollution that may exist in the water.

"It started as a project in our environmental science class this spring," said Cohasset science teacher Patty McGrail, who monitors the activities of senior Sarah Bertovich, juniors Amy Devlin, Alicia Laas, and Bea Rankin, sophomore Abby Coakley, and Scituate seventh-grader Brendan Michaud.

"The Board of Health got a grant so the students could continue and be paid a stipend," she said, "but the kids all volunteered before they knew they were going to be paid."

The students said they are proud to be undertaking a project that is not only hands-on, but benefits the town as well.

"It's been really fun and interesting," Alicia

Parking ticket hike possible

September public hearing slated

By Brian Brennan

For all of those who take the risk of parking illegally in town, knowing that the worst that might happen is a $15 ticket, selectmen would like you to think again.

Some selectmen are concerned that the current parking fines in certain places in town are not enough of a deterrent, and are considering raising some or all of the current $15 fines to $25 and hiking the current handicapped parking fine from $25 to $100.

Selectmen concerned with state of Hagerty property

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Dismayed by what they said was the building's 'deplorable' condition, selectmen wrote a letter to Cohasset Lobster Lab president Kevin Ulmer urging the non-profit group to better maintain its property.

"Ronnie McMorris and Merle Brown [both selectmen] called me up and said the Hagerty property looked terrible and we needed to send a reminder to Kevin Ulmer," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"The Lobster lab property looks worse now than it did when they got it, Haddad said.

The Lobster Lab is a private, non-profit educational research organization, which focuses upon the study of lobsters for genetic research, and will allow Cohasset students access to expensive genetics research equipment and methods actually used by scientists.

The letter which Haddad sent to Ulmer on behalf of the selectmen claims that the Lobster Lab is reneging on its lease, specifically a subparagraph which says that the failure of the lessee to demonstrate progress toward achieving projected construction, fundraising, and program goals constitutes a breach of the lease.

Stephen Bobo, a member of the Board of Health as well as the Lobster Lab, vehemently disagreed with the selectmen's charges.

Conservation commission reorganizes

In a recent memo, the conservation commission announced that Michael H. Dick is its new chairman and Susan G. Cope is the vice chairman.

Clarification of median value

A story in last week's Cohasset Mariner about the median value of homes in town warrants some clarification.

The median value of a home is not the mid-point between the highest and lowest price as reported but the midpoint in the range so that half of those sold are more than the median price and half are less.

For example, if 50 homes sold in a year, the median would be the value at which 50 sold for more and 50 homes sold for less than that amount.

State rules on election snafu

The state Office of Campaign & Political Finance has concluded that the Committee for Quality Town Services, a political action committee, acted improperly when it used the schools' bulk mailing permit to send a town-wide mailing before the May 22 override election.

It also said an elementary school principal's distribution of a newspaper article on the content of the ballot question to students with the weekly lunch menu was not consistent with the campaign finance law.

However no further review or action by the state is not necessary, said Michael H. Sullivan, director of the campaign and finance office.

"This decision is based on the remedial action taken and our conclusion that our review and guidance will ensure future compliance with the campaign finance law," he said.

At the time of the incident, committee spokesman Robert Spofford said the group thought it had the PSO bulk mailing permit number correct when the flyers were printed and didn't realize the error until the flyers were taken to the post office. The PSO is a private school booster organization.

Upon learning that the bulk mail permit was used improperly, the town contacted the state Office of Campaign and Political Finance and immediately filed a report with an explanatory letter with the town clerk.

The committee paid for the use of the permit, so no funds were expended by the town.

Pond Street construction

The installation of the sewer main along Pond Street has virtually shut the street down between Rt. 3A and Clay Spring Road, Safety Officer Rick Yocum said.

The construction in that section is expected to take up to three weeks. Police say traffic is being diverted, so motorists should seek alternate routes.

"It's going to be a mess for a while," Yocum said.

Those needing to access the high school, for example, should enter Pond Street by Spring and Cushing streets.

Atlantic Ave. parking spaces may be created

The traffic study committee will explore the option of creating two spaces on Atlantic Avenue, near Cunningham Bridge.

The spaces were proposed by Selectman Roseanne McMorris, and were debated by selectmen at their Tuesday night meeting.

A motion to vote on the spaces by Selectman Thomas Callahan was not seconded and the selectmen decided to instead forward the matter to the traffic study committee.

Sprinkler estimates received

Per the request of selectmen, Town Manager Mark Haddad has received estimates for sprinkler systems underneath Cohasset Common and Beechwood Ball Field.

The estimate for the common is $42,000, while the Beechwood sprinkler is estimated at $24,000.

Alumni, Milliken, and the Little League fields all currently have sprinkler systems installed.

Secretarial positions consolidated

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced the consolidation of part-time committee secretarial positions into two 40-hour positions, which Haddad hopes will promote communication between committees.

"We're going to make the secretary of the conservation commission and the planning board one job and the secretary of the board of health and the sewer commission one job," he said. "We hope the change will bring better continuity to the committees involved."

The move eliminates one part-time benefit position, which was vacant, and so the move saves money for the town as well.

Rt. 3A accident sends three to hospital

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

An accident in front of JJ's Monday afternoon sent three people to South Shore Hospital and stopped traffic along Rt. 3A for about 45 minutes.

Although none of the vehicles' occupants sustained life-threatening injuries, the sport utility vehicle and Volvo involved in the collision were badly damaged.

Police issued a written warning to the driver of the Volvo, Cynthia Gross Boorman, 35, of London, England for failing to yield to oncoming traffic. Boorman, who was traveling southbound on Rt. 3A , was trying to turn left into JJ's parking lot when the accident occurred at about 1:30 p.m.

The driver of the red Chevy Blazer, Jeff James, 36, of Arborway Road in Scituate, was headed north on Rt. 3 and was unable to stop.

The impact pushed the Volvo into an unoccupied Dodge Caravan belonging to Kathryn Collins-Wooley, 330 N. Main St., which was parked at JJ's. The caravan sustained minor damage.

Officer Rick Yocum said James appeared to be traveling the speed limit which is 50 mph in the area. The blazer, whose brakes locked when James tried to stop, left 74 feet of skid marks at the scene including those that occurred after impact, police said.

Yocum said the Jaws of Life were used to extricate Boorman's passenger, Jonathan Boorman, 29, also of London. Jonathan Boorman was admitted to the South Shore Hospital and released the next day. Cynthia Boorman and James were transported but were treated and released.

Yocum said there are usually one or two fender-benders a year near JJ's.

"It's the first time in a long time, we've seen a serious accident there," he said.

Police diverted traffic from Rt. 3A at its intersection with Rte. 228 in Hingham and at lower King Street for about 45 minutes following the accident.

Sewer board rejects Mendel Road condo connection

Homeowners threaten legal action

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

What do you do if you're septic system has failed so badly it's creating a health emergency and you're within a baseball throw of the new sewer line?

Place yourself at the mercy of the Cohasset Sewer Commission?

Not unless you've got a thick skin and can handle rejection.

That's what five homeowners on Mendel Road off Rt. 3A found out Monday when they implored the sewer commission to end their septic system nightmare and let them hook up to the sewer main being installed along Pond Street.

But they weren't told what they wanted to hear.

Despite seeping effluent on the surface, sewer commissioners were steadfast in their rejection of the residents' request. The Mendel Road homes in question — which make up the Olde Farm Hill Condominium Association were given a gloomy picture their chances of ever connecting to the sewer line.

"It sounds harsh and crass," said commissioner Ray Kasperowicz. "But the sewer commission doesn't owe you anything."

Kasperowicz said that if the commission allowed Farm Hill to hook up, it could be going beyond the bounds authorized by town meeting. Town meeting approved the Central Cohasset Sewer District that does not include Mendel Road. But Farm Hill abuts the condominiums at 100 Pond Street that are slated for connection to the sewer, a location that would make a hookup within their grasp.

Farm Hill would like to connect to the 100 Pond Street treatment plant as a stopgap measure and then connect to the sewer once the line is installed on Pond Street. The homeowners are willing to pay the cost of hooking up.

But under a plan approved by the state, the upgraded sewer treatment plant on Elm Street will have a capacity of 300,000 gallons a day, all of which is spoken for, commissioners said. Farm Hill produces about 1,300 gallons a day of wastewater.

If, after the upgraded plant — which is expected to come on line in June of 2000 — is up and running for a minimum of two years and not all the capacity is being utilized, then the door might open for more hookups.

That did little to assuage the concerns of the homeowners who have spent upwards of $30,000 trying to find a solution to their joint septic system, which is the second on the site to fail Title V, the state environmental code. The chances for a third — which has been engineered to do the job — are marginal at best, the residents claim.

"It sounds harsh and crass. But the sewer commission doesn't owe you anything."
— Ray Kasperowicz, sewer commissioner

"What we're hearing is that you're unable to help us although we'll pay the freight," said Mark Brennan, 2 Mendel Road, spokesman for the group.

Brennan said the issue would likely end up in court.

"We're not happy with your conclusion," he told the commission.

The Farm Hill homeowners went before the health board last month, which agreed to send a letter to the sewer commission on their behalf saying that the failed system constitutes a public health emergency. The homeowners also sent a letter pleading their case. At that time, all hoped the sewer commission would call an emergency meeting to immediately discuss the matter but that was not the case.

After receiving no response, Brennan sent a letter last week to the sewer commission that included a threat of legal action.

"My neighbors and I are wondering if your office is fully understanding the severity of our situation or avoiding a serious health emergency," Brennan wrote.

Olde Farm Hill, which was placed on Monday's agenda, is an old estate on about eight acres whose buildings have been converted into individual homes. The first joint septic system was built in 1991 before Title V became law. About 18 months ago, it was discovered the replacement system built in 1995 to Title V standards had also failed when one of the homeowners tried to sell triggering an inspection.

The exasperated homeowners installed a French drain, at considerable expense, to divert the ground water run off but that did not solve the problem. They also paid to have a new system designed but were discouraged when the engineer said it, too, could fail.

The town's health agent recently found "break out" (effluent) on the surface at the Farm Hill estate. The health board put the condominiums on a tight tank in May but the expense of being pumped every two days was too high for the homeowners. They unplugged the tank allowing the effluent to flow back into the leaching field. They said fines of $50 a day are less costly than emptying the 2,000 gallon tank every two days at a cost of $375 a whack.

Prospects of taking over the treatment plant at 100 Pond Street, which is privately owned, once those condos get the sewer, are not encouraging. It appears the state would have to get involved in issuing a groundwater permit requiring a hydrological study, which can be costly. Brennan said they would contact state officials.

"What we're hearing is that you're unable to help us although we'll pay the freight."
— Mark Brennan, 2 Mendel Road

In the meantime, the sewer commission suggested the homeowners get another engineer's opinion and was skeptical that a mounded septic system at the site would not be effective.

Neil Murphy of Murphy and Wait P.C. that designed the proposed new system at the site, said his comments to the homeowners were apparently misinterpreted.

"I said the soils were marginal," he said.

Murphy said while a Title V system could work at the site, it is not the best way to go.

"Do I think it could work? Yes. Is it the best way to go? No," he said. "Any (leaching) field has a certain life expectancy. It's a very expensive field. They (Mendel Road neighbors) would be better off taking other options."

The sewer commission also said Farm Hill could take its case to town meeting, which could vote to add it to the central sewer district. Fifty percent of the cost of both the North Cohasset and central districts are being subsidized with taxpayer dollars.

The only out-of-district hookup the sewer commission has approved so far is Newtonville, which consists of a handful of homes off Atlantic Avenue near the harbor. The commission said an exception was made in that case because Newtonville was polluting the harbor. Those homeowners approached the commission when the sewer district was still in the planning stage. Town meeting decided to include Newtonville in the central district, commissioners said.

Lobster lab told to shape up or ship out

"We are ahead of the plan in terms of fundraising and the architectural development of the property," he said. "We've made a request to the zoning board of appeals which has not yet been responded to and our plans are in the approval process with a number of town boards."

Bobo said that the fundraising ventures of the lobster lab have been very successful thus far.

"We've already got $45,000 on the bank and we have commitments for another $23,000," he said. "We have enough money."

Bobo also responded to the requests from the Board of Selectmen that the Lobster Lab clear the building and surrounding grounds of debris and cut back the brush along the building by Sept. 1 or risk termination of the lease.

"The debris and brush are not the responsibility of the Lobster Lab," he said. "That's supposed to be done by the Department of Public Works."

Haddad said that he would look into who was supposed to handle the matter of the debris and brush around the building, but that the building itself is the responsibility of the Lobster Lab.

"The condition of the building is the paramount concern of the selectmen regarding the property," Haddad said.

Bobo said that it would make little sense for those involved in the Lobster lab to take time to paint and fix up the building, because they plan to alter it significantly and will bring it up to code with town regulations as part of those alterations.

"The condition of the building is the paramount concern of the selectmen regarding the property."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The Lobster Lab is currently coordinating a project in which 40 Cohasset High School students work in conjunction with Camp Dresser McKee [CDM], the town's contractors for the study of water quality in Little Harbor, to measure pollution levels at 21 different sites in the harbor.

"Until the building is finished, the students use the high school to do all of their lab work," Bobo said. "There are problems with doing the testing in the schools, however, like last Monday, for example. The students couldn't get into the classroom because the floors were being waxed.

"We'd like to have our own lab to collect and analyze data. We have people willing to donate genetics equipment and we've already graduated two kids with advanced qualifications in genetics because of the Lobster Lab."

Students monitor health of Little Harbor

said. "We talked about the importance of a clean watershed system in physical science and now we can see it in our own town."

Bea said that she has received positive feedback from people around town regarding their project.

"It's great to find a project that fits the needs of the town," she said. "A lot of people are interested in what we're doing and they ask what we're finding, but I hesitate to give them any numbers until we know more."

McGrail said the students are knowledgeable about the methods involved in the project and do the testing on their own.

"The students really take over," she said. "I just sit back and monitor them. We do the same tests that the engineers [CDM] do, with the same equipment, and the same techniques, and it really gives the students the sense that they can do these things."

The students work with the tide schedule because the testing is done an hour after high tide in Cohasset Main Harbor and Abby explained the process which the students undertake to measure the pollution in the water.

"We go to 21 different sites and collect samples of water in sterile bottles," she said. "We measure the temperature and salinity of the water as well as measure the amount of fecal coliform in the water."

According to Board of Health member Stephen Bobo, the temperature of water is relative to the amount of pollution in it and the amount of salt affects what can grow in the water.

"After we get the samples," Abby continued, "we run them through a filter and put them into an incubator overnight. Then we come back the next day and read the levels of fecal coliform."

After the students read the levels of fecal coliform, which are found in the intestines of large mammals, the students input the data into computers and forward the information to the engineers at CDM.

The Lobster Lab released the first findings of the students' weekly testing on June 25.

"Findings from the data gathered to date show that about 15 percent of the readings of fecal coliform indicate severe pollution at several sites in Little Harbor," Bobo wrote in the report.

McGrail said that contributing to the study, which will continue through August, lets the students see that they can be a part of protecting the town's environment.

"This is a real study they're participating in," she said. "It's part of our town. There are commissions in town that anyone of voting age can be on and they may be able to use this knowledge on those commissions in the future."

Selectmen Tom Callahan said that CHL has spent the last year negotiating, but failing to approve several mutually agreeable plans.

"We had a number of agreements between our experts and their experts, and they just didn't get signed [by CHL]," Callahan said.

CHL has been closed down since July, 1998. Since that time, the CHL negotiating committee has been working with lawyers from the landfill under the assumption that owner Paul Barry intended to close the dump once and for all. CHL even submitted a closure and post-closure plan to the Department of Environmental Protection.

John K. McNabb Jr., a member of the CHL negotiating committee and the most vocal opponent of the landfill, said it appears CHL was just stalling until the courts made a final decision on a planned expansion. CHL had appealed a decision by the board of health denying an extensive expansion of the landfill in a section known as Area V. CHL's latest request asks permission to reopen the landfill using the same Area V.

CHL has been closed down since July, 1998. Since that time, the CHL negotiating committee has been working with lawyers from the landfill under the assumption that owner Paul Barry intended to close the dump once and for all.

"Just look at the timeline," McNabb said. "On July 14, the Superior Court case ended, and the town prevailed against CHL's lawsuit. The next day, CHL filed with the state to reopen the landfill using the exact same area that they wanted to use for the expansion. Most likely, it was their plan all along to hold out in negotiations and apply to use Area V."

On July 15, Raymond Quinn, an engineer for CHL's consulting firm, SITEC Environmental, submitted a notice of project change plan to Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand asking for fast-track approval to reopen the landfill. Quinn stated that the new plan represented a reduction in scope, and did not require a full environmental review.

Apparently, Durand did not agree with Quinn's assessment of the amount of environmental review required to consider the project. On July 21, Jay Wickersham, Assistant Secretary of Environmental Affairs, announced that the project would be listed in the Aug. 10 issue of the Environmental Monitor. Wickersham added that a 20-day comment period would follow, and only then would Durand make a decision about the proposed reopening plan. Wickersham instructed CHL to notify everyone who commented on the original Area V Environmental Impact Report when CHL presented the project as an expansion of the then-opened landfill.

McNabb said he thinks CHL is trying to take advantage of the state's recent decision to partially lift a previously impose moratorium on new landfills. He said the listing in the Environmental Monitor is an important part of preventing the landfill from reopening.

"This is definitely a win for the town," McNabb said. "It's good that so many people and town boards contacted Secretary Durand and requested additional environmental review."

The selectmen, the water commission and the board of health sent letters to Durand opposing CHL's latest plan.

Town nixes CHL negotiations

The town of Cohasset CHL Negotiating Committee reports to the town that it considers negotiations with Cohasset Heights Limited ("CHL") to have come to an unsuccessful standstill. While the committee remains open to further dialog with CHL, it now appears that CHL has resumed active aggressive steps against the interests of the town. The town intends to respond to these steps in kind and to defend the interests of the town and of the environment.

The committee has been meeting with CHL for more than a year to negotiate the closure and post closure details of the former landfill site operated by CHL. Countless hours have been spent by committee members in lengthy sessions that have included experts retained by the town and CHL, involving gas control, gas mitigation, odor control, wetlands, protection of the Lily Pond watershed and water supply, groundwater and monitoring issues. Substantial progress was made on all fronts and a final draft agreement was negotiated and presented to CHL for execution as a preliminary step to presentation of the agreement to the public and to the various boards and commissions of the town. CHL, however, in the end balked, chose not to sign the agreement, and instead made filings with MEPA to allow reopening of the landfill via a renewed attempt to get the proposed Area V landfill expansion permitted, and other controversial filings with DEP, signaling an end to its participation in negotiations.

With a resumption of litigation, we are pleased to report that CHL's appeal of the Board of Health Site Assignment decision denying expansion to Area V has been dismissed, and that lawsuit has finally been concluded between the parties in favor of the town.

The CHL Committee consists of:

Chairman: Kevin Ulmer as representative of the Board of Health

Jeff Wahl, representing the Conservation Commission

Tom Callahan and Ronnie McMorris representing the Board of Selectmen

Mark DeGiacomo, as the representative of the Zoning Board of Appeals

John McNabb as representative of the Water Commission

Mark Haddad, as Town Manager.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that a special public meeting of the selectmen would be held in September on the issue of raising the parking fines.

"We shouldn't raise them all," said selectman Merle Brown at Tuesday night's meeting of the Board of Selectmen. "There are some places, such as Cunningham Bridge, where people repeatedly park illegally. Those places are where we should raise the fines. I'd like to ask [Police Chief] Brian Noonan the places where raising the fines are most needed."

Chief Noonan said that if the selectmen were to increase some fines, he would prefer that they increase them all.

"Originally, the selectmen told me they were thinking of raising all of the $15 tickets to $25," he said. "I just think they should all be uniform.

"If they fluctuate, and we have different fines for bridge violations than we have for other violations, I think it will be confusing for everyone and it will be better if they're all $25.

Noonan also said that he isn't sure that raising the fines will act as that much of a deterrent.

"We raised the fines at Sandy Beach to $25 this year," he said. "We've still had 435 tickets totaling $10,875 at Sandy Beach this year, most of which have been this summer. Raising the fine doesn't seem to be much of a deterrent."

Noonan also said that the total amount of parking fines in town this year has been $18,260, so tickets at Sandy Beach account for over a half of the town's parking fines.

"Those figures are only the tickets that we've issued," he said. "A lot of tickets get voided, perhaps as many as 1/3, but this at least gives a good idea of where the tickets are being written."

"We raised the fines at Sandy Beach to $25 this year. We've still had 435 tickets totaling $10,875 at Sandy Beach this year, most of which have been this summer. Raising the fine doesn't seem to be much of a deterrent."

— Police Chief Brian Noonan

The police department received a shipment of 5,000 new tickets, at a cost of $1,000, due to the increased fine at Sandy Beach, which went into effect January 1. Noonan said those tickets would be wasted if the fines are changed. The tickets list the various violations so the officer can check off which one.

"We've only issued 901 tickets since the first of the year," he said. "It would be impossible to have someone change every violation on the tickets. As of now, there are 19 violations on the ticket books and only two are $25, Sandy Beach and handicapped parking."

Parking ticket increases do not have to go before Town Meeting because of a vote taken at a Special Town Meeting on October 28, 1996, which allows selectmen to raise the parking fines in town by a simple majority of the Board's members.

Article 20 of that meeting allowed the selectmen to establish a schedule of fines for parking violations and set the maximum amount for a fine paid within 21 days at $25. State law allows towns to assess handicapped parking violations of no less than $25 and sets the maximum handicapped parking ticket at $100.

"A lot of towns do go to $100 for illegally parking in handicapped zones," Noonan said.

Revenues from parking fines go into the general town fund with the exception of the money derived from handicapped fines, which selectmen can use for purposes of projects to help the town's handicapped.

"All of the money from handicapped parking fines can be used to abate handicapped issues if the selectmen decide to segregate the money for that use," Haddad said. "I think it's a good use of the money."

Buckley resigns as treasurer/collector

Joe Buckley, the town's treasurer/collector and the Cohasset Mariner 1994 Citizen of the Year, has submitted his letter of resignation to Town Manager Mark Haddad, stating a desire to simply slow down and relax.

"It is with heavy heart that I must resign the position of treasurer collector for the Town of Cohasset, said the 76 year-old Buckley. "When you learn to play poker, you are told you have to know when to hold your cards and when to fold them.

"Well, it is time for me to fold and to take time to smell the roses."

Haddad said he was saddened when he heard of Buckley's resignation.

"Joe said it was with a heavy heart that he resigned and it is with a heavy heart that I accept his resignation," Haddad said. "He has been an outstanding employee and his appointment was a no-brainer."

Buckley was elected to the position of treasurer collector in 1996 and was appointed for another year by Haddad in April.

Haddad said that the town would advertise the position, which he said would pay up to $50,000, in the Boston Globe. Buckley has agreed to stay on until a replacement is found, a gesture which Haddad called 'gracious'.

"Joe has done a great job," said Selectman Merle Brown. "It's going to be hard to see him go."

AROUND TOWN

WELCOME TO THE WORLD

On June 28, Madelyn Nicole Schwandt was born, such a happy event! Madelyn's Mom and Dad, Rob and Lynne Schwandt, along with her big brother Graham (18 months), are thrilled beyond words, to say nothing of her grandparents! Maternal grandparents are Paul and Edna Barry, her paternal grandparents are Gary and Cheri Schwandt. We welcome you, Madelyn, and cannot wait to see you strolling around town!

TOP DIVER

Kelsey Bell competed in the Bay State Games July 17 at the UMass/Boston pool in diving

Kelsey finished third in her division, Novice Women's 1 Meter. She was awarded a third place medal and Bay State Games jacket at the finals. Medals and jackets are awarded to the top three athletes in each division and event.

Everyone is extremely proud of you, Kelsey!

SUMMER INTERN

Had a nice chat with David Farrag (Linda Farrag's son); what an illustrious young man! David is currently working on his master's degree at Suffolk Law School in Public Relations; for his summer work he is an intern (legislative) for Mary Jeanette Murray, which he is enjoying very much.

HOCKEY LIST NEEDED

The Hockey Boosters would like to compile a list of current addresses of senior alumni hockey players who graduated from Cohasset High School between 1975 and 1995. Please call Joanne Pilczak with information at 383-0268.

BASEBALL STAR AT SKIDMORE

The Skidmore baseball team enjoyed the best season in its 13-year history, with the season being highlighted by capturing the UCAA title for the first time. One of the key players was Nick Welz. His pitching was outstanding with five victories to his credit! Nick is the son of Weezie and Bryan Welz.

Nick Welz fires toward the plate.

GYMNASTS QUALIFY

Congratulations go to Carlie Carter and Siobhan Hart-Kelly — due to their hard work in gymnastics, they both qualified for the BayState Game finals that were held at MIT on July 17. Carlie qualified in the uneven bars, and teammate Siobhan qualified in vaulting and floor exercises. Great going, gals!

DEAN'S LIST AT UMASS

UMass/Amherst has announced the names of students who qualified for the dean's list for the 1999 spring semester at that school. Two Cohasset scholars made the grade; Megan R. Fahey and Eric J. Wenmark, and we congratulate you both.

PREP SCHOOL GRADUATE

The Loomis Chaffee School sends word that Nicholas Robert Herzog was among its graduates at the 83rd commencement. Nicholas is the son of David Crossland. At Loomis Chaffee, he was a member of the third interscholastic lacrosse team. Nick will attend the University of Vermont.

HONORS AT MASSASOIT

Massasoit Community College announced Cohasset students who earned a spot on the dean's list, and here they are: Rachael A. Carlisle, Michael C. Coates and Trevor D. Cook.. Congratulations to you all!

OFF TO TABOR

Alexander Johnston, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Johnston, will be entering Tabor Academy this fall as a member of the sophomore class. Alex is currently participating in Tabor's "Orientation at Sea" program which brings 12 to 14 students, Tabor faculty and Tabor student crew members together for six days of sailing, exploring and learning along the coast of Maine. This program exposes incoming students to the ocean with a general introduction to oceanography, marine biology and related environmental issues. Hopefully, we will hear from Alexander as to how he found life aboard the S.S.V. TABOR BOY.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

WICKER GOOD!

Wicker is moving indoors. The most popular wicker material continues to be rattan. It comes in a variety of shapes and sizes, from the large canes that are used to make the frames to the narrow strips used for weaving. Rattan wicker is a good choice for garden rooms and solariums. In addition, a whole new array of natural materials is also making its way into the home. Wicker furniture featuring sea grass, banana leaves, water hyacinth, hemp and raffia are also available for adding intriguing new texture to wicker. Some, such as water hyacinth, have a thick, ropy appearance, while others, such as raffia and hemp, have a finer texture, similar to coarse linen. Each brings natural color indoors.

Although typically used in gardens and solariums, wicker furniture is becoming a popular choice for rooms inside the home. At THE DESIGNING WOMAN, our goal is to create beautiful, harmonious rooms that reflect your personal tastes. We work with you and your budget to create an environment that stimulates your imagination. Often, we can improve the look and feel of any environment by working with your existing furniture and accessories. Call us at 383-6411 to learn more about our services or to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: The word "wicker" refers to a technique, not a material.

IT'S HAPPENING

Knights of Columbus joins Heritage Days

On Saturday, Aug. 7, the Scituate Knights of Columbus will again sponsor the Heritage Days Family Cookout/Pig Roast. This annual event will be held at the K of C Council hall on Route 3A in Scituate (across from PJ'S Country House).

For the ninth consecutive year, Deputy Grand Knight Jeff Palmer will roast a 250-pound pig, which will be wood smoked for nearly 24 hours before serving. Served along with the roast pork will be smoked turkey and smoked fish, as well as traditional barbecue items such as hot dogs, hamburgers, Italian sausage and fresh corn on the cob.

The K of C pool will be open for this family event and is included in the price of admission. Admission is $9 for adults and $3 for children under 13; a family of five or more is admitted for $25. The fun begins at 3 p.m. on Saturday, with the carving and serving of the pig commencing at 4 p.m.

Farmer's Market open for summer

The Fourth Annual Cohasset Village Farmers' Market starts at 2:30 p.m. Thursdays on beautiful Cohasset Common.

Fresh, locally grown produce, herbs, bedding plants, perennials, wreaths, baked goodies and breads, jams and jellies, flowers and handcrafted soaps will be available every Thursday all summer long through the middle of October.

Anyone interested in helping to sponsor the Farmers' Market, and local growers and crafters interested in participating in the market are welcome to call Jennifer Warshaw at (781) 383-6992 for more information.

Nantasket picnic for seniors

South Shore Elder Services invites all seniors to attend its seventh annual picnic on Nantasket Beach, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., Aug. 19.

Entertainment will be provided by "Legends of Music."

A boxed lunch (consisting of a chicken salad sandwich, tuna salad sandwich, macaroni salad, potato salad, beverage and turnover) will be served at noon on the Pavilion. The cost for lunch is $1.75.

If you would like to come, call the nutrition department at (781) 848-3910. All reservations must be made by Friday, Aug. 6.

Unicorn Singers auditioning new members

The Unicorn Singers, the South Shore's most unique chamber chorus, is auditioning for new members.

A number of the singers have backgrounds in musical theater, or are gifted instrumentalists. Many are soloists at area churches and director Margo Euler says she likes to use the full range of abilities of chorus members.

Prospective members should be strong singers, have music reading ability and lots of energy! To arrange an audition, call 749-6561 or 749-7890.

Children's Drama Workshop presents 'The Lion King'

The Cohasset Recreation Department announced that performances for The Children's Drama Workshop's summer production of "The Lion King" will be Tuesday, Aug. 10, at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., and Wednesday, Aug. 11, at 1 and 7 p.m. at the Cohasset High School Auditorium.

Ninety-four cast members (from age 5 to 14) have been rehearsing at the Cohasset High School Auditorium from 1 to 3 p.m., Tuesday through Thursday, beginning Tuesday, June 30. The script is based on the Disney movie, "The Lion King," and the CDW ensemble cast is made up of lionesses, cubs, mice, hyenas, grass and plants as well as a plethora of jungle animals.

Founded by Elizabeth Deveney of Cohasset, who directs and produces the show again this year with the help of her sisters Grace and Sara, The Children's Drama Workshop is entering it's 11th summer in conjunction with the Cohasset Recreation Department. Past successful productions of The Children's Drama Workshop include "Anastasia" (1998), "Once Upon a Time" (1997), "Aladdin" (1996), "Beauty and the Beast" (1995) and "The Little Mermaid" (1994).

Tickets for "The Lion King" go on sale Monday, Aug. 2. The cost is $7 in advance and $8 the day of the performance. Tickets may be purchased at the Cohasset Recreation Department. For more information, call 383-4109.

TREATING SCOLIOSIS
Scoliosis is the sideways (lateral) curvature of the spine that most commonly occurs among adolescent girls. Most girls undergo a growth spurt in the twelve months prior to their first menstrual periods, during which time many curves progress. In the past, scoliosis has been treated with back braces and even surgery. Now, mild and moderate cases are treated with more conservative means. One conservative option involves the use of orthotics, or heel lifts. These were first used to correct pelvic imbalance at Logan College of Chiropractic. The use of heel lifts relies on the laws of physics to reason that, by leveling the pelvis (which is the foundation of the spine), chiropractors can return the spine to mid-line.

EDITORIAL

Olde Farm Hill

Sewer commissioners Gary Vanderweil, Henry Rattenbury and Ray Kasperowicz have to be about the most unpopular people in town right now.

The commission has remained resolute not to allow out-of-district sewer hookups no matter how desperate the situation for the homeowner.

That was abundantly clear Monday, when commissioners denied pleas for help from the five homeowners who make up the Olde Farm Hill condominium association on Mendel Road.

In fairness to the commissioners, they may not have a choice.

When it comes on line — the new, upgraded treatment plant will have a capacity of 300,000 gallons per day which is all spoken for in the central sewer district. Mendel Road is not a part of that.

They are correct in pointing out that it was town meeting, at the advice of the commission, that delineated the sewer district. And they are wise in proceeding with caution and not overtaxing the new plant. It could take two years or longer, once the plant is fully up and running in June 2000 to determine if there is some excess capacity.

But, nevertheless, the Olde Farm Hill homeowners are still faced with a failed joint system (their second) and are understandably gun-shy at the prospect paying upwards of $50,000 for another one.

However, the fact remains, the board of health declared that the septic failure there constitutes a public health emergency. So unless we're missing something, there's a serious situation on Mendel Road which is unresolved.

What we don't understand is why the health and sewer boards don't work together to help solve the problem. There is a private treatment plant that serves Olde Farm Hill's neighbors, the 38-unit condominium complex at 100 Pond Street. 100 Pond is slated to be hooked up to the sewer eliminating its need for the treatment plant.

Couldn't the two boards help Mendel Road with the state environmental hurdles that might be required to allow them access to that plant? Even if that means the town takes the mini-plant over so others could hook up, too.

Mendel Road isn't the first out-of-district health emergency the town will face and it certainly won't be the last. But there is no excuse for aggrieved residents' letters to go unanswered and not to be notified of a meeting when they are on the agenda, as was the case with the sewer commission last month. That's just a matter of simple courtesy.

After all, we are in this together. Olde Farm Hill neighbors, as they watch their property values plummet, are helping to subsidize the sewer project with their tax dollars. And if parts of down are declared health emergencies due to effluent breakout on the surface, it's an environmental problem for everyone.

Train is only viable alternative

TO THE EDITOR:

I have been a regular commuter to Boston, from Scituate, since 1972. Up to this point, I have used Plymouth & Brockton Street Railway Company to commute. I am very definitely in favor of the train. It seems to me to be the only viable alternative.

Public transportation is not only a right, but a necessity. The expressway is out-of-date & obsolete. It can not handle the cars it has now, never mind any additional cars. We need alternatives which take cars off the highway, not put additional cars back on.

One of the alternatives that has been talked about is a boat from Scituate. I am not sure how viable this option is — given the fact that it would have to go out into open ocean. If there is a northeaster, even the big commercial fishing boats are tied up safely at the pier. There are other issues — cost & parking.

Another alternative that has been talked about is to run the train down the median strip of the expressway. It seems to me that this would be fairly expensive to build. It would also involve putting cars onto the road to get to the train.

Another alternative that I read about yesterday was to use trains that could run on both railroad tracks & the road. According to this article, this alternative would run from the Hingham shipyard. I am not sure how many would drive up to the Boatyard to use this alternative. Many, I am sure, would simply use the boat.

One of ideas mentioned, as a way of ameliorating the effects of the train, is to build a tunnel through Hingham Square. This would cost a lot of money & cause a great deal of havoc. Even the proponents of a tunnel admit that the tunnel idea is simply a device to derail the train.

Complicating the matter even further, Plymouth & Brockton seems to be positioning itself to drop all local bus service to Scituate, Cohasset, & Hingham. This will force even more cars onto the road, or to drive to Braintree or the Hingham boat — even further complicating the parking situation there.

The residents, of Scituate & Cohasset, do not have many alternatives for reliable and dependable transportation to Boston. Many of the residents are from "one-car" families — where driving to Rockland, Braintree, or Hingham, is simply not an option. Right now we have P&B to rely on. If that service is dropped, what are our options?

I believe that the advantages of the Greenbush line far outweigh the disadvantages. All of the disadvantages can be solved very easily. If we can put a Man on the moon, we can certainly solve the problems of grade crossings without digging a tunnel.

For all the reasons which I have mentioned above, I urge supporters of the Greenbush train to raise their voices and let their feelings be known. I would urge supporters to contact the Secretary of Transportation, Kevin J. Sullivan.

Hingham selectman wants to test state political waters

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

A second Hinghamite may enter the next state race. In light of the fact that rumors are abounding in town about his potential candidacy, Selectman Martin Crane wants to set the record straight.

After serving seven rewarding and productive years on the board of selectmen, he's ready for a change. Crane, a Republican, has his eye on either the state senate seat currently held by Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) or the state representative seat now occupied by Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset). His own interest is supported by a number of residents who have been urging him to seek a state office.

While he's eager to enter into state politics, Crane emphasized his support for both incumbents.

"I would only run for these seats if Bob Hedlund wins the mayoral race in Weymouth (and thus gives up his senate seat) or if either candidate decides not to run again," he said. "Both have a strong interest in local issues and constituent services."

Until any of those scenarios occurs, Crane plans to take a wait and see approach — at least on the state level.

On the home-front, he's busy with a number of issues which significantly affect the quality of life in Hingham — the proposed restoration of the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad through the heart of Hingham; a proposed runway expansion at Logan International Airport; a plan to redevelop the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station; and continuing to address the issue of affordability in town — all of these concerns ones which he would like an opportunity to address while holding a seat in state government.

"It's important to maintain the opportunity for those with modest incomes to afford to live within the communities they choose or have lived in for most of their lives," he said. "This is especially difficult in good economic times when housing costs and other costs of living increase."

Hingham resident Philip Edmundson, a Democrat, recently announced his interest in running for the senate seat in 2000, which could place him and Crane on opposite sides of the ticket in the same race if certain circumstances occur.

During his years as selectmen, Crane has developed a keen interest in public affairs.

"I've been able to participate in decisions which affect the quality of life in town," he said.

Those issues include affordability, inclusionary zoning (which provides an opportunity for developers to include some affordable housing in their proposals), school building projects and the institution of DARE and community policing. He also is pleased to have played a significant role in increasing the number of EMTs and instituting a paramedic program in Hingham.

During his tenure, Crane has seen a transition in terms of budget responsibilities to a position where selectmen now have a major say over budget issues. He also was a staunch proponent of institution term limits for various town boards and instrumental in the initiation of cable television coverage of selectmen's meetings.

Finding ways to fund projects (such as the changeover of the landfill to a transfer facility) by saving monies ahead of time to avoid imposing a large tax burden on citizens is of top priority to Crane, whose current terms ends in April 2001.

Crane is eager for an open seat to occur, because he feels his experience on the local level will provide a firm foundation for holding a position in state government.

"I've seen over the course of time that decisions made at the state level have a significant impact locally," he said. "If an opportunity opens up, I'd have a great interest in participating in the state decision making process."

In terms of maintaining quality of life in town, Crane looks in the direction of Plimoth Plantation and Williamsburg, which have a strong focus on their historic backgrounds.

"Hingham is more modernized, with a thriving downtown and harbor. I would like to see the town progress, but not lose what makes it special," he said.

At the same time, Crane advocates a regional approach to addressing issues which affect not only Hingham but also neighboring towns on both levels.

He's seen the fruits of his endeavors to this end during time spent working with Cohasset, Scituate and Hull on common issues, including Greenbush and the water supply, which serves Hingham, Hull and part of Cohasset.

Statewide, Crane thinks serious attention should be paid to carefully controlling development, conserving resources and developing regional transportation solutions.

"Land, water and the environment should all be addressed," said Crane. "We need to plan ahead now, not in 5, 10 or 25 years."

Of top priority at the state level is the issue of health care.

Crane, who has had a medical practice in Weymouth for 24 years, feels his background as an insurance payer and patient care provider gives him valuable insights concerning health care.

Calling himself a "fiscally careful but socially conscious" individual, the 17-year resident of Hingham says he's excited about the possibilities which could present themselves.

Dr. Martin Crane

In preparation for that time, Crane is currently involved in discussions of setting up a joint practice with a professional who would take some of the burden of his medical profession off of him and allow him to carry out a campaign.

Should an opportunity present itself to run for state office, Crane's family —wife Kathi, an avid gardener; sons Brandon, 16 and Ryan, 13; and daughter Heather, 14 — is prepared to support his endeavors.

He feels challenges at the state level relate to finding ways to fund services, including education and special education and transportation, within limited budgets and keeping people involved in and trusting government. Limiting intrusion into private lives of citizens when it's not necessary is also important to Crane, who holds degrees from Princeton and Harvard Medical school.

Crane's feet are firmly planted on sound values.

Coming from what he calls a "simple background," Crane intends to use his understanding to empathize with others and "make decisions based on that premise. What we are is where we came from. I'm a straight shooter, and I'll call it like I see it."

Should Crane run for a state opening sometime in the future, he won't regret the effort spent, even if he doesn't win the seat.

"That would be the will of the people," he said, stating he believes in loyalty, "being an American and respecting my country. I also believe in honestly representing those you're elected to serve."

While he's prepared to dedicate some of his own resources towards his campaign, Crane feels assistance from others "shows you have their respect, support and trust."

In his spare time, Crane enjoys traveling, golfing with his sons and fishing. He'd also like to become more adept on the family's home computer.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on three roll calls from recent Senate debate on a $20.8 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. The House and Senate approved different drafts of the budget and a conference committee is working out a compromise version. Since fiscal 2000 began on July 1, the state has been operating on a temporary budget based on last year's spending. There were no important roll calls in the House or Senate last week.
PUBLIC DEFENDERS' SERVICES(S 2000) Senate 30-7, rejected an amendment reducing funding from $6.778 million to $6.701 million for the operation of the committee on public counsel services which provides public defenders for criminals. Amendment supporters said this will save taxpayers $77,000 and still adequately fund this account at the same level as last year. They noted additional money should go to district attorneys who prosecute the crimes and not to the criminals who commit them. Amendment opponents said the $77,000 cut will hamper the administration of these services and noted the constitution requires that even poor criminals have a right to an adequate defense. (A "Yea" vote is for the $77,000 cut. A "Nay" vote is against the $77,000 cut).	Y
COMPTROLLER(S 2000) Senate 31-7, rejected an amendment reducing from $7.606 million to $7.253 million funding for the office of the state comptroller. Amendment supporters said this $353,000 cut will adequately fund the comptroller's office at the same level as last year and argued the additional funding is unnecessary. Amendment opponents said the comptroller's office is responsible for the financial accounting of state government and needs adequate funds to perform its duties. (A "Yea" vote is for the $353,000 cut. A "Nay" vote is against the $353,000 cut).	Y
MINIMUM WAGE/CPI(S 2000) Senate 32-7, rejected an amendment striking a section of a proposed amendment which raises the minimum wage from $5.25 to $6.75 over three years. The amendment would eliminate a section which provides that following the hike to $6.75, future wages would be raised to reflect increases in the consumer price index (cpi). Amendment supporters said any future hikes should be decided by legislators who are elected and can be held accountable rather than by a faceless index with questionable accuracy. Amendment opponents said indexing the minimum wage to the cpi will ensure that wages keep pace with the continuing rise in the price of consumer goods. They noted this will allow thousands of hardworking wage earners to support their families. (A "Yea" vote is for striking the section indexing future minimum wages to the cpi. A "Nay" vote is against striking the section and favors the indexing).	Y

More tips on home composting

[A newsletter created by A. MacDonald and issued periodically by the Cohasset Recycling Committee]

We're continuing where we left off several weeks ago, discussing the simplest of backyard piles, just a heap of leaves, grass clippings, weeds, perhaps some vegetable scraps, maybe some earth, the whole thing preferably turned over now and then and kept moist [not soaking], in either shade or sun, and the resultant mix should break down into usable humus in a season. The warmer the weather, the faster matter becomes compost.

Summer is the best time to start a compost pile; organic matter doesn't break down much in the winter. Besides, summer heat invites composting garbage instead of dumping it in the trash. As far back as I can remember, we never put garbage in the trash; I cannot recall ever seeing or smelling garbage in the kitchen trash or in trash anywhere else where I have lived—because we have always composted. It's far neater, sweeter, and—dare I say it—more natural to compost.

We mentioned one practical home compost container, a wooden box with slatted sides and top, which keeps out any roaming skunks or dogs and allows you to deposit a wider range of organic matter than you could in just an unconfined heap.

Compost in proper balance has no odor. This writer had compost piles in the classroom for years, built by students [that is, contributed to by all of us using whatever was at hand—seaweed, animal manure and straw, raw garbage, fish, worms, even roadkills], with never an objectionable odor. Layering helped, and the layering/decomposing process was easily observed on a daily basis because the container was a fish aquarium; and the odor-free factor was all the more noteworthy because the glass sides could not of course breathe, the way a compost container should. One time we had a rogue tomato plant appear out of the top, and we enjoyed observing its excellent growth. A student even learned how to cross-pollinate it so the plant produced fruit. We always put in some plastic, some aluminum, glass, and some paper, in order to see at the end of the term what degree of decomposition had occurred. You guessed it—the plastic, aluminum, and glass did not break down even a bit, while the paper did: This is a very important finding which is to be continued. Watch for it!

Time flies! To finish up for now: in our home we keep a compost bucket under the sink, so we have no garbage in our trash, making the recycling much easier. Over in the corner we have the bag for regular recyclables, then a separate plastic bag for plastic bags and a bag for junk mail. How do you manage yours? Great topic for chitchat. See you next time.

Recreation Road Trip

Couple wins weekend in wine country

High-jinks proposal was 'irresistible'

William Chisholm of Cohasset thought it was high time he proposed to his long-time lady love, Gina Sardano. So he hired a crane to raise a banner proposing marriage and a diamond ring to her seventh-floor office window at a large bank building in Quincy. His banner listed only two answers as options: "yes" and "maybe." She chose "yes," using a giant crayon.

Now the engaging story of their engagement has won the couple a weekend in Napa Valley wine country, one of two first prizes in Beringer White Zinfandel's 1999 "Irresistible Proposals" essay contest.

Even before his high-jinks proposal, Bill had a record of romantic and whimsical gestures. "One Halloween, I carved a huge pumpkin, stuffed it with flowers and stuck it on top of her car at her office," he recalls. "We had a great courtship, and we are still having fun."

They were married in 1992; between them, they have eight children, all grown, 15 grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. One of their children spotted the contest announcement and urged them to enter.

Their trip to Beringer Vineyards will include two nights at a resort hotel, a private tour and tasting at the winery, and dinner at its private dining facility. Bill and Gina will take advantage of their stay to visit his daughter in San Francisco.

They were married in 1992; between them, they have eight children, all grown, 15 grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. One of their children spotted the contest announcement and urged them to enter.

Beringer sponsored the essay contest following a nationwide survey it conducted of America's wedding proposal styles. The survey found that tradition still prevails around this ritual: 25 percent of men still get down on one knee, and a ring is involved most of the time.

"But we also found that couples get amazingly inventive and creative around this special moment of their lives," said author and relationships expert Susan Page, one of three contest judges. "That spirit of adventure bodes well for a couple's life together, and we wanted to hear more of these stories."

The grand-prize in the contest, a week in Napa Valley, went to a Galveston, Texas, couple, Christopher Lowe and Andrea Smith. While working on a ship off the cost of Louisiana, Chris sealed a proposal poem in a bottle and threw it overboard, trusting that fate, the waves and a friendly finder would deliver the note to his intended bride (it took two months). The other first-prize winner, Nancy Molinski of Aurora, Ill., told how her fiancé talked his way temporarily into the cast of a Cirque du Soleil performance and popped the question on stage, in front of 2,500 people.

Seven other finalists received gift certificates for dinner in their favorite home-area restaurant.

Beringer received nearly 2,000 entries to the contest. The top three essays will be posted on Beringer's web site at www.beringer.com.

High time for a proposal

William J. Chisholm
COHASSET, MASSACHUSETTS

The beautiful woman I had fallen for was named Gina. She worked in a large banking facility in Quincy, Massachusetts. During office hours her buddies agreed to distract her away from her floor office building windows. I'd had a friend in the sign business make a large banner asking "Gina, will you???" Attached was a three-foot red crayon and two boxes for her reply: YES or MAYBE ("no" was not an option!). Also attached to the banner was a spinning mirrored ballroom ball which supported a jeweler's box containing her, hopefully to-be-accepted engagement diamond! The crane hoisted "the question" to the 7th floor windows. The tall building seemed to lean toward me as hundreds of her fellow employees looked out the windows in excitement. She, too, saw the banner, came downstairs, and checked off "YES." We're living happily ever after — it's been great ever since.

William and Gina Chisholm in their Cohasset home.

The photos that caused all the ruckus. Bill hired a crane to raise a banner proposing marriage to Gina in 1989. The couple was married Jan. 25, 1992 by Fr. Keohane at St. Anthony's. Bill and Gina plan to go to the Napa Valley in March.

Cohasset enrichment programs give parents options

Day care offered through public schools

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Parents encounter a number of dilemmas regarding child care, but those with a long commute often find another set of difficulties. What does a parent of two elementary school students do if he or she has to leave for work at 7 a.m., but Osgood does not start until 9 a.m.? Similarly, it is tough for many parents to get out of work and home before 5:30 p.m. What will the kids do until then?

Luckily, there is a unique program of the Cohasset Public Schools that serves parents facing these and other logistical problems. The Cohasset Enrichment Programs, which run according to the school calendar, provide day care both before and after school as well as afternoon care for kindergarten students who attend the morning class and vice versa. To the delight of many, taxpayers don't pay a dime.

"We are a self-supporting, non-profit organization open to all Cohasset residents with children in grades K-6," said director Elizabeth Alpert at a recent school committee meeting. "We are supported by tuition and the program has been offered through the public schools since 1987."

The Breakfast Club is open daily from 7-9 a.m., and children who are registered may be dropped off at Osgood any time after 7 a.m. Breakfast is not provided, but children may bring their breakfast with them or eat it before arriving.

Children in grades 4-6 are taken to Deer Hill at 8:15 a.m., while Osgood students are dismissed to walk to their classes at 8:50 a.m.

The Kindergarten Enriched Day program [KEDS] operates two daily sessions which run opposite the regular kindergarten classes, and Alpert said cultivating the children's self-esteem is the primary goal of the program.

"Our goal with KEDS is to foster positive self images within the children," she told the school committee. "We have circle time, play time, snacks, and small and large group activities. The children are encouraged to be creative and independent thinkers."

"We are a self-supporting, non-profit organization open to all Cohasset residents with children in grades K-6."
— Elizabeth Alpert, director

The After School Program is divided into two groups, with grades K-2 at Osgood and grades 3-6 at Deer Hill.

"We separate the kids for a couple of reasons," Alpert said. "First of all, it helps divide the large number of children (95), and it also allows us to plan age appropriate activities."

The third-grade students are brought by bus or walk to Deer Hill, and the all-important snack is served to all the students upon their arrival. Children at Deer Hill are required to do a half hour of homework or reading, excluding Fridays, and there are plenty of other activities to occupy their interests until pickup at 6 p.m.

"We have outdoor play, they can do sports in the gym, and we have a loft where the kids can read or play," Alpert said. "We try to create a fun atmosphere for the kids."

Parents can choose between the programs in which they wish to enroll their child or children. There is a 10 percent discount for one sibling and a 15 percent discount for a second sibling.

"Fees go to pay the salaries of the instructors, as well as for snacks, supplies, and gym equipment," Alpert said.

School committee members praised the efforts of Alpert and her staff.

"I thought the staff was very accommodating," said Betsy Connolly. "My son Sean always looked forward to going."

"My kids love it," said Kathy Ofsthun. "The whole neighborhood goes."

"It's a very good program," echoed Mark DeGiacomo. "We wanted to get the news out to the school committee and the public about various programs and what they do. We also wanted to confirm that it really is self-supporting, and it certainly seems to be."

Soccer players get a kick out of games

By Scott Salesess
CORRESPONDENT

The 1999 Bay State Games have been going on for the past couple of weeks. The Bay State Games are a summer tradition here in Massachusetts, with boys and girls of different ages and various locations coming together to compete in a variety of sports. Players must try out for their respective teams, which makes the competition all the better.

Athletes from the town of Cohasset compete in the Southeast region. The region is comprised of neighboring towns such as Scituate and Hingham, but also includes towns as far away as Medway and Millis. Each region is further broken down in different divisions that are primarily based on age.

The Scholastic Division of the Bay State Games is made up of mostly high school juniors and seniors. The girls soccer team that competed in the Scholastic Division for the Southeast region, included two players from Cohasset: Lydia Crafts and Eileen Ridge.

Unfortunately the Southeast girls soccer team struggled losing four, and tying one.

While both players live in Cohasset, Lydia Crafts attends Milton Academy. Crafts decided to try out for the Bay State Games because she wanted to play in a "summer league," and thought that the games would offer a chance to compete against other top players from around the state. Crafts described her experience at the games as "fun," adding that she thought there was "good competition," and even more importantly she stated that the experience "definitely helped me."

Because of all the talent on the various teams, players may be moved to a position different from the one they are used to be playing in high school. Ordinarily Lydia plays forward when she competes for Milton Academy, but during the Bay State Games she was moved to midfield. While this may be initially unsettling for players, it may be a boon to players, in terms of their all around development.

In addition to the competition, Crafts seemed to enjoy the camaraderie of the games, stating that she "liked her teammates," and also describing first year coach Kristen Miloney as a "good coach." While most of her teammates were new to her, Crafts was friendly with fellow Cohasset resident and teammate Eileen Ridge.

Crafts stated that while they attend different high schools, the two girls "played soccer together while growing up." Lydia is looking forward to the upcoming high school season, and she also reported that her hope is "to play soccer in college."

Eileen Ridge is a varsity girls soccer player for Cohasset High. Eileen described her stint at the Bay State Games as a "positive experience," adding that the only negative was the "extreme heat" that plagued the tournament.

In response to the question of whether she hopes to play soccer in college, Ridge responded by saying "Yes, it's definitely my goal to play in college." She added that there were "a lot of college coaches at the games," which is an added benefit of competing in the games.

The recruiting aspect of the games seems to be an important factor, as a player may catch the eye of a coach, who might not have otherwise been exposed to the player.

Unfortunately the Southeast girls soccer team struggled in Bay State competition. The games were played at the UMass/Boston campus, with the Southeast region team playing five games total, losing four, and tying one.

Coach Kristen Miloney stated that despite their record, she thought the team played "fairly well," given the fact it was their "first time playing together." The Bay State Games were a new experience for not only the players on the Southeast team, but also the coach. The games gave Miloney her first head coaching experience, as she recently graduated from Plymouth State, where she played soccer.

While winning always enhances one's experience and memories, it seems even more important that the Bay State Games offer kids the opportunity to compete against other top players, as well as giving young coaches like Miloney the chance to gain some valuable head coaching experience.

Caitlin Donovan, left, and Jackie Kahn helped lead the Southeast/Coastal girls lacrosse team to the gold medal in the Bay State Games on Sunday. Southeast/Coastal topped West/Central 15-8 for their second consecutive state crown.

Lacrosse players are golden

Five Cohasset lacrosse players — four playing in the Scholastic division, and one in the Open — earned gold medals at the 1999 Bay State Games.

In the boys Scholastic division, returning Cohasset High School co-captain Kevin DeVito and junior longstick midfielder Ronan Buick played key roles in the Southeast team's undefeated run. In the championship game, goalie DeVito stonewalled his opponents in the second half, limiting them to two goals as Southeast came back for an 8-7 victory.

In the men's Open division, 1997 Skipper co-captain Matt Belson, a Patriot League all-star at Lafayette College, led a Southeast team defense that also won its tournament championship.

For the girls' Scholastic, it was a repeat performance for Jackie Kahn, Cohasset High's co-captain, and Caitlin Donovan of Brewster Academy. Both earned gold medals in 1998 for the Southeast, and on Sunday they did it again, as their undefeated team won a convincing 15-8 win over West. Southeast included players from Needham, Sandwich, Phillips Academy, Thayer, Walpole, Duxbury, Brewster, Montrose and Cohasset.

"Jackie Kahn anchored our defense, and was our best athlete back there," said Stonehill College coach Michael Daly, who handled the Southeast team for the second year. "She made our transition game work, especially when we scored eight goals in ten minutes in the second half of the gold medal game."

Daly also had praise for Donovan. "Caitlin began the tournament somewhat overshadowed by our big guns from Needham and Andover," he said. "But she stepped into a starting role in our third game, and in the championship, she really helped us control the midfield."

The five Cohasset medalists also received championship jackets from Bay State Games sponsor Reebok.

After a year off, Seaside road race returns in style

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Jason Hobbs and Michelle Sarney ran the same course, but took very different routes to victory in Saturday's sixth running of the Nantasket Seaside four-mile road race.

Hobbs, a Bentley College graduate, came from behind and held onto a small but comfortable lead over the final mile to best the 450-runner field in 21 minutes, 25 seconds for his first Seaside win.

Sarney simply ran away from all her competitors to become the first two-time female winner, 1997 and 1999, crossing the finish line in 23:16, a whopping 2:39 in front of runner-up Elizabeth Voigt of Brighton. Braintree's Gayle Laing finished third in 26:09.

Hobbs and Sarnery weren't the only two winners as more than $9,000 was raised for the Hull Academic Support Coalition (HASC) which supports, monitors and promotes academic programs in Hull's schools.

"This is great; it's really great," said David Kellem, president of HASC and one of the many race-day volunteers. "We will be running it again next year."

Race director Kristen Evans echoed Kellem's enthusiasm. "I'm thrilled with what we raised," she said.

Evans, in her first year as director of the popular summertime race, was also "extremely pleased" with how smoothly the event went after its one-year hiatus from the road-racing circuit on the South Shore.

Hobbs, a Bentley College graduate who was looking to break 22:00 in his first race in three months, found himself very much in the first-place hunt just after the two-mile mark. He was well off the lead pace after passing the mile mark in 15th place in 5:06. Racing on limited training miles, he opted to play the waiting game behind the leaders.

Up front, East Burke's Michael Bruhn (second, 21:37) and Richard Doubledey of Brookline (third, 21:42) battled for the lead as the course wound past the Hull Yacht Club and towards the Pemberton neighborhoods.

"I wanted to go out pretty easy and work my way through," said Hobbs, who competed on the cross country and track teams at Bentley. "I didn't think I was going to win, though."

Hobbs' conservative first mile proved to be the right move on a day where hazy, muggy conditions made running uncomfortable for many of the competitors. He steadily closed on the two front runners and by the time he reached two miles (10:47), Hobbs was in sole possession of third and running smoothly, still gaining

Race director earns a perfect mark

Chalk up an "A" for effort for first-year race director Kristen Evans, who assumed head duties of Saturday's Nantasket Seaside 4-mile Road in Hull.

But don't stop there. Evans breathed life back into the popular summertime race and has proven she has both the organizational and leadership qualities that are essential in pulling off a quality road race.

The Seaside event offered everything a runner looks for in a road race and it's up to the race director to see that they are all covered.

Evans was clearly on the ball and didn't miss a beat.

The mile marks were clearly posted and volunteers yelled the runners' split times as they passed by. There was plenty of water along the course, which is essential in any weather, but even more so when conditions are uncomfortably warm and muggy as they were Saturday. And probably the most important of all, complete, accurate results were available to the runners, minutes after they passed the finish line. They included overall place, place in age group and pace per mile.

Evans also showed her compassion and flexibility when two runners, who had yet to register, arrived at the starting line just minutes before the start. Evans told them not to worry about it and that they could register after the race. You won't see too many race directors allow runners into a race so long after registrations are due. It was a great gesture on Evans' part and you can bet the two runners won't forget her kindness too soon. It's the little things that bring runners back to certain races year after year.

Race directors bear the brunt of complaints from the runners when there are blunders and gaffs in a race's organization, but rarely receive credit for a successful job.

Here's to Kristen Evans and a job well done.

The Seaside race had 450 registered runners with 370 official finishers, a great turnout after a year off… The top-20 finishers all bettered six-minute miles. Michelle Sarney, the overall women's finisher was clearly the class of the field. She was the lone woman in the race to average better than six-minute miles. Her time of 23:16 worked out to a 5:47 mile pace… Winner Jason Hobbs may have been worried about someone sneaking up to him over the final mile but he would have had quite a battle on his hands if the scenario played out. Hobbs has exceptional track speed with a half-mile best of 1:57 and a PR of 4:24 in the mile. He averaged 5:21s without extending himself until the final mile where he ran hard to the finish… Hingham's Allison Donovan, winner of the 18-and-under division and fourth overall in 26:51, was the first female finisher in the Hingham 4th of July Road Race… Fifth-place finisher Craig Sarney, husband of women's winner Michelle, still holds the outdoor track record in the two-mile at Braintree High School… Hull runners did well in their age-group categories, which leads you to believe there is a definite advantage to being familiar with a course. Or is there? The overall winners were from Newton and Easton, respectively… Several local runners fared well in their respective age groups in the Seaside race. Humarock's Hawk Hickman placed second in the 55-and-over category with a time of 25:58 and Scituate's Paul Brigham took fifth with a time of 31:02 in the same category. Richard McNamee of Norwell was third in the 19-54 division. McNamee surged across the finish line in third with a 22:23, a 5:35 pace…The Fourth Annual "Coby's Run" Fourth Annual Memorial Road race will be held Aug. 22 at the Gates Intermediate School on Scituate Common beginning at 9 a.m. The day includes 10K and 5K runs along with a 5K walk and Fun Run for ages 10-and-under. For more information, call (781) 545-7116 or fax to (781) 554-6086.

ground on Bruhn and Doubledey.

The break came just before the three-mile mark when Hobbs surged into the lead for good. Neither Bruhn nor Doubledey faltered over the last mile into Hull Village, but they weren't able to cut into Hobbs' small, but comfortable lead.

"I picked it up a little bit," Hobbs said of his move into first place. "You get going in a groove and just keep it up."

Despite his 1:57 half-mile speed, Hobbs was hardly overconfident as he raced along the bay and back through Hull Village. He was still concerned about his opponents, who were very much in view, and somewhat surprised they hadn't gone with him when he took the lead.

"I was surprised how much ahead I was," said Hobbs. "I kept looking back over the last mile."

Hobbs said he liked the course and didn't find it to be difficult. He admitted he was concentrating too hard to take in the scenery along the route.

"It (the course) was nice," Hobbs said. "The one hill, you don't really notice it. It's early in the race."

Sarney had no Bruhns or Doubledeys lurking behind her over the final mile. She simply turned the race into a one-runner affair from the start. Sarney placed 15th overall and was the lone female competitor to average under 6-minutes per mile (5:49).

"It was pretty; I enjoyed it," said Sarney, a nurse at the Good Samaritan Medical Center.

The Salve Regina graduate fought off the warm running conditions by making use of the number of water stops along the route. "It (water) really helped," Sarney said. "It was really muggy. The last two miles were tough."

Sarney was cheered across the finish line by her husband, Craig, who finished fifth in 22:15. The two met at the NCAA Division 3 National Cross Country Championships in Iowa.

Both Hobbs and Sarney plan to run the race next year and would like to come away with victories once again.

"It's a nice course and nice race," Hobbs said. "You should keep it going."

'Relay for Life' raises $76,000

More than 500 walkers demonstrated their commitment to eliminating cancer by raising more than $76,000 at the American Cancer Society's 24-hour Relay for Life fundraiser at Cohasset High School May 21-22.

"The 1999 Relay for Life was a very rewarding learning experience for me," said Victor Vanderlugt, relay committee co-chair. "I was very impressed with the dedication of our committee and the enthusiasm from people of all ages in our region. With some more experience under our belts, I think we will improve on the overall organization of the event and, of course, on the total donations to our worthy cause."

Craig Bleicken, relay committee co-chair, says the relay is a way to do something in the fight against cancer.

"Many of us think there is nothing we can do to help when it comes to cancer. Perhaps as an individual there isn't, however, as a team there is, and every individual's contribution to that team matters greatly," said Bleicken.

"My grandfather, Owen, survived cancer and lived to be 89. Those years gained because of my grandfather's courage were some of the best in my life, and the memories will always be there. I thank him and every survivor for giving the gift of memories to those around them," he said. "Many diseases have been beaten and cancer is going to be one of them. Someday I hope to hear grandchildren learning about cancer in their history books and not in their experiences. Please join the team in making this a reality."

As one of 70 Relays throughout New England, the Relay for Life in Cohasset contributed to the success of the American Cancer Society's New England Division, which raised more than $5.6 million. The American Cancer Society's Relay for Life, which began in 1985 in Tacoma, Wash., is the largest fundraiser in the nation, expecting to raise more than $100 million nationally this year to support programs of research, education, patient services and advocacy. This year, 1.5 million people in 2,500 communities are participating in Relay for Life events across the United States.

Individuals who would like to participate in or help to plan for next year's Relay for Life in Cohasset, can contact Mary Shepherd at their local American Cancer Society office by calling (508) 584-9600. The American Cancer Society is a source of comprehensive information about cancer through its (800) ACS-2345 number, which operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week, in both English and Spanish, its online information web site at www.cancer.org, and its survivorship hotline, (877) 333-HOPE, for detailed discussion on cancer topics.

Cohasset Harbor walkway is moving ahead

Engineers to draw up plans

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

While Cohasset Harbor is undeniably one of the most picturesque spots in town, a number of visitors to downtown events such as the annual Festival on the Common don't even realize it exists, only a few blocks away.

"We want to link the harbor and the downtown business area," said Village Revitalization Task Force chairman Dean Rizzo. "The harbor walkway would create a more cohesive connection between the two areas. A lot of people downtown don't realize that there's a beautiful harbor nearby and visitors to the harbor don't know about the downtown."

Rizzo said the walkway would be funded by grants because there are limited town funds available for such a project.

"We'll fund the majority of the project through a variety of federal and state grants," he said. "There are a number of grants available for improving waterfront access so those may be some that we'll go after."

The walkway would begin at the Hagerty Property and go to Government Island, then along Border Street to Veterans Memorial Park. From there, a floated boardwalk would go behind Kimball's to Wheelwright Landing. The walkway would then continue down Elm Street, some of whose residents have fiercely opposed the project, to the village center. (See related story page 19)

"A lot of people downtown don't realize that there's a beautiful harbor nearby and visitors to the harbor don't know about the downtown."
— Dean Rizzo, chairman of task force

The walkway is to be a combination of red brick sidewalks, bike paths, and wooden boardwalks near the water, and the task force received an initial grant to hire an engineering firm to do a feasibility study of the project, which has since been completed.

Rizzo said that there is $1,900 left in that budget, and so Coast Line Engineering (CLE), the firm hired to do the feasibility study, will prepare a number of drawings and cost estimates of the proposed walkway.

"There are three cost alternatives we are looking at, based on materials, design, and feasibility," he said.

Rizzo estimated the low range between $300,000 and $500,000, the middle range between $1.5 million and $2 million, and the high range between $2 million and $4 million.

CLE is scheduled to bring its latest drawings and cost estimates, broken down by sections of the proposed walkway, to the task force's August 12 meeting.

Task force member Jackie Dormitzer said she was excited by the prospect of a harbor walkway.

"You can't really take a walk along the water in Cohasset, and you certainly can't take your kids with you," she said. "So much is closed off and what Dean [Rizzo] proposes is very appealing. Dean deserves a lot of credit and I'd like to support him.

"Who else is thinking about how to beautify the town?"

Not everyone shared Dormitzer's feelings, however, and Hamilton Tewksbury, 81 Elm St., said he is less than enthused about the idea of a harbor walkway.

"You can walk it now without spending millions of dollars," he said.

Rizzo said that while some may not like altering the harbor area, others see the potential benefits of the project.

"A lot of people are fearful of change, but a lot of people are in favor of these projects as well," he said.

"There's no doubt that Cohasset is beautiful as it is. We're looking to enhance it, not ruin it."

Elm Street residents air concerns about roadway plans

Discuss proposed grant with Village Revitalization Task Force

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Angry about a proposed project that would narrow their busy road, a handful of Elm Street residents sounded off at a meeting of the Village Revitalization Task Force last Wednesday night.

The project, which is part of the proposed harbor walkway that would stretch from the Hagerty property to the village, calls for the town to replace the concrete sidewalk on with red brick, put peninsulas along the right side of the road from the Village to the Harbor, and plant a canopy of Elm trees to give the street a more small-town feel.

Dean Rizzo, chairman of the task force, said that the fears of residents are premature, because the town has not yet been awarded the grant which will fund the majority of the project.

"We became aware of a grant opportunity for Elm Street for $230,000 and we'll know by August 16 whether or not we've been awarded the grant," Rizzo said.

The grant in question, which Cohasset is applying for along with 11 other towns, is from the Massachusetts Highway Department, and Rizzo said securing those funds the only way the Elm Street project will occur.

"If we don't get the money, we won't even consider the Elm Street project. If we get it, then we'll have public forums and really get into the thick of the proposal and many changes can be made."

Some residents who would be impacted by the project were unwilling to abide by Rizzo's wait-and-see approach, however.

"Why apply for a grant without getting the input of the residents first?" asked Valerie Lipsett of 85 Elm.

"There was no time for feedback from the town," seconded Hamilton Tewksbury of 81 Elm. "I don't think you gave the residents a fair chance to voice their problems with the project."

Rizzo said that the grant opportunity arose very quickly and that the task force had to act swiftly in order to apply for it, but said that they made their best effort to gauge the feelings of residents given the little time they had to work with.

"We did as much as we could to get the word out to residents who would be impacted by this project," he said. "We gave out questionnaires and of the twelve we received back, nine were for the project and three were against it. We would have liked to go into it more, but sometimes you have to act more quickly than you really want to."

Tewksbury said that he felt narrowing Elm Street would not alleviate concerns about speeding on the street, which the task force has claimed would be a potential benefit of the project in its correspondences to residents.

"All the streets in town are fast roads," he said. "Narrowing it [Elm St.] isn't going to change that. Your drawings say the road will be 23 feet curb-to-curb, which would only leave 11-1/2 feet per travel lane, which I feel is unsafe."

"Basically, we have a good road the way it is. If it doesn't need fixing, why fix it?"
— Hamilton Tewksbury, 81 Elm St.

Rizzo said that the Massachusetts highway standard width per lane is 11-1/2 feet, and that getting rid of proposed bike lanes on each side of the street would increase the width of each lane to almost 15 feet.

Tewksbury was unmoved by the calculations, saying, "Basically, we have a good road the way it is. If it doesn't need fixing, why fix it?"

Lipsett said that she felt that some of the steps taken in the project to increase pedestrian traffic to the village did not make sense to her.

"They [the task force] say the want to make Elm Street more pedestrian friendly," she said. "How is it going to be more pedestrian-friendly with bricks and peninsulas when there's snow in the winter."

Rizzo reiterated that arguing over the specifics of the project was fruitless until the decision on the grant is handed down, and that the task force would hold a number of public forums in that event to discuss the details.

"If we get the money, we're going to have plenty of time for public input," he said.

Tewksbury asked Merle Brown, the board of selectmen representative to the task force, if town meeting would get to make the ultimate decision regarding the Elm Street project, should Cohasset receive the grant.

Brown said that town meeting would have to make the ultimate choice because the grant will only cover 90 percent of the cost of the project. The other 10 percent would have to be financed through a combination of private donations and money from the town, which could only be appropriated by town meeting.

"We're not looking to sneak anything by people or pull the wool over their eyes," Rizzo said. "If we get the grant, many changes can be made or we could always decide to not do it and refuse the grant."

Lipsett doubted whether the task force would indeed turn down the grant money if that was the wish of the people.

"I'm worried that 'no thank you' might not happen," she said.

OBITUARIES

Elizabeth G. Bond

Elizabeth G. Bond, 72, of Cohasset, a retired teacher, died July 21 at her home.

Mrs. Bond was a special education teacher for more than 30 years until her retirement in 1994.

She was very active following her retirement. She spent four years traveling with Global Volunteers to such places as Poland, Greece, and Italy. While in these countries, she taught English in high schools and in the tourist industry. She was scheduled to travel with the group to the Cook Islands.

Mrs. Bond graduated from Cambridge Latin, received an associate's degree in teaching from Lesley College in Cambridge, a bachelor's degree in education from Sagamon State College in Springfield, Ill., and a master's degree in special education from Curry College in Milton.

She was a member of the Southern Artery Senior Center.

Born in Medford, she lived in Springfield, Ill., Cincinnati, Ohio, and Litchfield, Conn., before settling in Cohasset 26 years ago.

Wife of the late Richard J. Bond, she leaves a son, Richard J. Bond of Westwood; a daughter, Susan L. Aidala of Huntington Station, N.Y.; and four grandchildren.

Elizabeth G. Bond

A private memorial service will be held at a date to be announced.

Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Memorial contributions may be made to a scholarship fund being established in Mrs. Bond's memory through the Hingham public schools.

Winifred H. Grazier

Winifred H. (Gilger) Grazier, 87, a homemaker, died Monday at Queen Anne Nursing Home in Hingham after a brief illness.

Born in New York City, Mrs. Grazier also resided in Cohasset and Norwell before moving to Hingham a few years ago.

Wife of the late Theodore Russell Grazier, she leaves a son, Francis J. Tizzano of Pensacola, Fla.; a daughter, Winifred K. Kuhn of Cohasset, five grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

She was the Gold Star mother of the late Russell A. Grazier, who died while serving in the Vietnam War.

Services and burial will be private.

Donations may be made to the Salvation Army, 147 Berkley St., Boston 02116.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 30 Central St., Norwell.

Senior housing needed

Some residents have to explore leaving Cohasset

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Where do you plan to spend your Golden Years? If your answer is here in Cohasset, you should know that a lack of available housing options for seniors are causing some longtime residents to explore moving elsewhere.

A number of older residents in town have expressed their desire to escape from the shackles of work and maintenance that it takes to own a substantial home and to move into a smaller condominium-type space that would allow them to simply relax and enjoy their retirements.

The Council of Elder Affairs will host a senior housing forum on Sept. 14 to explore options for a group that makes up 23 percent of the town's population, according to the 1998 Town Census. A number of those seniors have encountered difficulty in finding adequate step-

Grave sites looking up

Cemetery committee is making progress

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The cemetery committee has made significant strides toward increasing the number of spaces available for graves at Beechwood cemetery and also has plans in the works for another cemetery site off Route 3A, near the recycling center.

All of this is news to selectmen, however, which is why the cemetery committee will appear at the Tuesday night meeting of the selectmen to inform them of the committee's activities.

"We found a piece of land owned by the Woodside cemetery, which is disjointed from Woodside by wetlands and we've never tied it in," said cemetery committee member Glenn Pratt, who has been working with the town on the dilemma of creating cemetery space since 1977.

Because the land which the cemetery committee wants to use is owned by the town, the

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Streets closed or under construction

Police want residents to take notice that the following streets are under construction due to the installation of sewer mains for the next few weeks: Pond Street, Clay Spring Road, Tupelo Road, Old Pasture Road, Evergreen Lane, Border and Elm streets, Smith Place, 500-800 Jerusalem Road and Elm Street from the police and fire stations to the Cove.

Generosity is appreciated

Ralph Perroncello, commander of VFW Post 9146, acknowledged the initiative and generosity of Glenn Pratt who paid a contractor $1,000 to repair the Craig Simeone Memorial Square that was damaged due to a motor vehicle accident.

"It was our understanding that the damage happened shortly before the Memorial Day weekend and that the DPW lacked the resources to accomplish the necessary repairs," Perroncello wrote in a July 20 letter to the town manager and selectmen. "Mr. Pratt concluded that is was unacceptable to have the Memorial Square in disarray for Memorial Day and took decisive action."

Perroncello said the post, which has a limited budget, reimbursed Pratt $200.

"It would be nice to see Mr. Pratt fully reimbursed, but we realize that may not be possible," Perroncello wrote. "In the future, we hope that the Town of Cohasset can assure that veterans' memorials are maintained without total dependence on the generosity of private citizens."

Clarification on median value

Last week's brief about median value should have said: if 100 homes sold in a year, the median would be the value at which 50 sold for more and 50 homes sold for less than that amount.

Police report on violations

Police report that from Jan. 1 through July 28, there have been 901 parking tickets issued for a total of $18,260.

The most violations have occurred at Sandy Beach were police issued 435 tickets. Others where more than 20 violations have occurred include, parking in a restricted space (173), Government Island (106), handicapped area (41), blocking fire/exit lane (36), all-night parking restriction (28), obstructing sidewalk/crosswalk (23), and Wadleigh Park (21).

Brush chipping accepted

Residential brush will be accepted at the D.P.W. parking area on Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 7 and 8 from 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. No trees over 12" in diameter. No contractors, please!

Connolly on SPED Advisory Committee

Betsy Connolly, a member of the Cohasset school committee, has been appointed to serve on the Massachusetts Association of School Committees (MASC) Special Education Advisory Committee. Members are responsible for studying special education issues of concern to school committees and reporting to the Association's Board of Directors on their findings.

Connolly has been a member of the school committee for one year.

MASC is Massachusetts not-for-profit association of local, regional and vocational-technical school committees dedicated to serving the needs of local school districts. The mission of the association is to ensure excellence in school committee leadership through advocacy, training and service.

No permits at D.P.W.

D.P.W. Supt. Harold W. Litchfield announced that "R.T.F. and beach permits will not be available at the D.P.W. building Aug. 2-8.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Aug. 10.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

SOFA, SO GOOD

Most homeowners and apartment-dwellers begin decorating their homes with furniture by purchasing sofas. In fact, it is hard to imagine a time when sofas did not exist in the furniture vocabulary, but this was indeed once the case. It was not until the Middle Ages that benches, meant for seating two or more people, were outfitted with seat backs and sides. These pieces, called "settles," may have been fine for "setting down," but they did not exactly encourage napping. When upholstery was invented, sofas began to take on an air of comfort. Finally, the modern sofa emerged in the 1850's, when coil-spring upholstery came into widespread use.

For thoughtful, expert design services, call THE DESIGNING WOMAN at 383-6411. We remain on the forefront of timeless design. We can create a detailed design plan based on your personal tastes, space, and lifestyle. Whether you're decorating needs require a sofa or an entire room in your home or office, we can keep your interior alive with drama or subtlety for years to come.

HINT: Coil-spring design in furniture is derived from earlier carriage design, for which the springs were invented as shock absorbers.

NASA capsule recovered from depths of Atlantic

Cohasset bomb expert aids in retrieval

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

One of the most amazing underwater discovery expeditions ever undertaken was completed on July 19 off the coast of Cape Canaveral, Florida when a 1961 NASA capsule was retrieved from a depth of 15,600 feet by an expert crew of deep-sea artifact hunters.

If you're wondering what on earth Cohasset has to do with the retrieval of the Liberty Bell 7, astronaut Gus Grissom's can-shaped capsule, the answer is Hugh Sease, 66 Margin St., an expert in demining unexploded ordnance.

In other words, Sease is a bomb expert. Trained in the Navy as a member of an elite bomb squad, he is now deputy director of environmental and explosive services for UXB International, a private, Virginia-based company specializing in explosive waste services.

Sease explained how someone who graduated college as a geology major ends up becoming an expert in explosives.

"My father was a career Naval officer, and when I graduated college I decided I wanted to go into the Navy as well," Sease said. "I wanted to be part of an elite, small unit. The Navy SEALS weren't taking anyone, and so I signed up for the Explosive Ordnance Disposal [EOD] unit, which is a military bomb squad."

After going through the intense EOD school in Huntsville, Alabama, in which 38 started and only five graduated, Sease worked with unexploded ordnance in such locales as Naples, Italy, and Puerto Rico.

"We worked with NATO to train others in demining practices," he said of his time in Italy. "There are still a lot of mines in the Mediterranean and the U.K. from World War II, as well as on the battlefields in France."

"In Puerto Rico, where I met my wife, there are still cannonballs from the Spanish-American War that never went off and sometimes they're sitting under people's houses.

"We took them to a range and exploded them. It's hard to believe, but they still work."

Sease also took part in a program based in Key West, Florida, that teaches animals to search for explosives in the ocean.

"The program is called marine mammal systems and we taught dolphins and sea lions to search for and retrieve explosive devices, just like you teach a dog to fetch," he said. "The program used to be classified, but after some animal rights groups found out about it, they got upset and it was declassified. When it was declassified, it was found that the Navy animals were better treated than aquarium animals or animals at Sea World."

After deciding that he had little left to accomplish in the Navy, Sease found his current employer, UXB International, on its web site.

He became a crew member aboard the discovery vessel because there was known to be a bomb on board the NASA capsule which had not detonated during the 38 years it had been submerged.

"There was a SOFAR [Sound, Fixing, and Ranging] bomb bolted into the equipment bay, which was designed to be hydrostatically armed and fired," Sease said. "The way the bomb was designed to work was that, as the capsule sunk, water pressure would push an out-of-line detonator in line with the firing pin, which would cause the bomb to detonate."

The reasoning behind the inclusion of the SOFAR bomb on board the Liberty Bell 7 was to signal naval ships in the area as to where the capsule was sinking, but Sease said that the limits of technology in the early 1960s would have precluded recovery of the capsule even if naval ships knew where it was.

"They would never have been able to recover it in the early 1960s," Sease said. "The computerized tools necessary for such a recovery just hadn't been designed yet."

NASA's earlier days

Though the advances in computer technology that we know as we approach the next millenium were worlds away in 1961, the space program was going full speed ahead, and Gus Grissom was a major player during NASA's earlier days.

One of the original Mercury seven astronauts along with John Glenn, Alan Shepherd, Scott Carpenter, Deke Slayton, Wally Schirra, and Gordon Cooper, Grissom flew over 100 combat missions during the Korean War as a member of the Air Force before being selected by NASA for space travel.

Grissom's Liberty Bell 7 touched down in the Atlantic as planned following the mission which made him the second American in space, but something went awry following splashdown.

"The hatch was supposed to blow off and he was to be airlifted by helicopter," Sease said. "There are different theories about what happened, though it's impossible to tell without the hatch, which was not recovered. One theory says he panicked and blew the hatch himself.

"Water started to enter the hatch and Grissom jumped out because it was sinking. When he jumped in the water, his space suit started to fill up. He had sewn several special mercury dimes into his suit, which he wanted to give away as momentos. The extra weight almost drowned him."

Grissom was rescued just in time by helicopter pilot Jim Lewis, who went along with the discovery ship that retrieved the Liberty Bell 7 from its underwater home for the last 38 years.

Though he escaped drowning on that day, Grissom was not spared on January 27,1967, when a fire erupted during a routine preflight test of the Apollo 1 spacecraft.

Grissom and fellow crew members Ed White and Roger Chaffee were dead within seconds, unable to escape due to a mechanical hatch that could not be opened from the inside. Two years before man set foot on the moon, a mission Grissom had dreamed of being a part of, he was gone.

His legacy did not escape Curt Newport, however, who led the expedition to retrieve Liberty Bell 7.

"Curt is sort of an artifact hunter and he had been after the capsule for 14 years," Sease said. "He and others did research and narrowed down the area where the capsule was to a 24 square-mile box."

"They would never have been able to recover it in the early 1960s. The computerized tools necessary for such a recovery just hadn't been designed yet."
— Hugh Sease

Once Newport and his crew had pinpointed a search area of a manageable size, they contacted the Discovery Channel, which agreed to underwrite the cost of the project in return for being allowed to film a documentary about the expedition, which is slated to air this winter.

The search for Liberty Bell 7 began in April, when the discovery crew lowered a side scan sonar, which maps contacts on the bottom of the ocean. In essence, the crew was looking for anything man-made.

Sease didn't go on the maiden discovery expedition, because without the underwater pictures that were taken on that mission, there was no way to know if the bomb had exploded.

"If the bomb had exploded, it would have blown a huge hole through the side of the ship," he said. "When they got the pictures, if it was obvious the bomb hadn't gone off, they were going to fly us [Sease and fellow UXB expert Buddy Eades] to the Bahamas and take us by helicopter to the ship."

The side scan sonar located pieces of beryllium, which was the metal that NASA used to make the capsule's heat shield, just as they were about to bring the mechanical device back on deck. A complication ensued, however, when a cable holding the expedition's only remote operated vehicle [ROV] snapped, and the ROV hit bottom, halting the expedition in its tracks.

"Oceaneering [a deep-sea exploration company contracted for the voyage] only had one other ROV, which was in the Pacific, looking for the USS Yorktown, which was sunk in World War II during the Battle of Midway," Sease said. "The Discovery Channel couldn't afford to wait, and so Oceaneering built a brand-new ROV and we all got ready to go from the Everglades on the 4th of July."

Capsule fully intact

Sease was asked to be part of the crew the second time around because pictures taken underwater had clearly shown the capsule to be fully intact, meaning the bomb had not gone off.

It took the Oceaneering crew only three days to relocate the capsule with the new ROV, at which point the focus of the expedition switched from locating the capsule to actually bringing it to the surface.

"They had to rig it in order to recover it," Sease said. "The capsule weighs 3,000 pounds and it had a titanium ring around the top. They had to make custom-made tools to fit around that ring. It was all pretty amazing."

Meanwhile, Sease waited and waited to do his part, which would only happen if and when the Liberty Bell 7 was brought on board.

"Our job was like that of a fireman," he said of himself and Eades. "We only had work to do once the capsule was brought on deck. Everybody had a daily job to do except us."

Sease said that he passed the time by reading, watching movies, and taking a lot of naps, though he and Eades also spent time studying the bomb which they might find when the capsule was brought on board.

"We got design drawings of the bomb from NASA and figured out how it worked. There was a question the bomb might go off, so we brainstormed all of the different scenarios as to why the bomb didn't go off as it was intended to.

"It could have been misfired, or the metal skin of the bomb may have corroded. We also had to think about what condition the spring of the bomb would be in. We figured that the chances of the bomb going off were about the same as winning the lottery."

Sease's theories were put to the test when the capsule was retrieved on July 20. Immediately, the members of the crew who had worked so tirelessly to retrieve it wanted to see and touch the capsule which had been the object of their collective desire for so long, but Sease did caution them that a bomb may still have been inside.

"There was a camera crew and a still photographer from the Discovery Channel, and they obviously had to be allowed to take their pictures because they were paying for the expedition," he said. "My only warning was to not reach in and start grabbing things."

After the camera crews had spent 20 minutes photographing the capsule, Sease and Eades started looking for the bomb.

"Everything was covered in mud having been on the ocean floor for 38 years," Sease said. "We were gently spraying down the components with a garden hose and there was some nasty stuff raining down over us. We washed down everything but we couldn't find the bomb.

"I saw a heavy parachute tub sitting on the ground and I lifted it out. I felt around the bottom of the capsule and the bomb was the first thing I saw."

Though the bomb was originally supposed to be bolted into the equipment bay, Sease quickly pieced together how it ended up on the floor of the capsule.

"It was strapped to a cradle, and the rivets were corroded, so it must have just fallen down as it corroded," he said. I flipped it over and there was a red sticker that said 'Burmite', which is an explosives company out in California. When I saw that sticker, I knew for sure that we had the bomb."

After taking some pictures with the bomb, Sease threw it overboard into international waters, convinced that it posed little or no danger.

With the specter of the bomb removed, crew members and photographers were free to roam inside and around the capsule, which will be on permanent display at the Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center.

Cable television customers will be able to witness the expedition, including Sease's work in finding and examining the bomb, as part of a Discovery Channel documentary, which will air on December 12, from 9-11 p.m., according to Discovery Channel press secretary Karen Baratz.

While downplaying his importance in the expedition, Sease said he was overwhelmed by the technology that went into retrieving the Liberty Bell 7.

"My part was small, but I thought the whole process was amazing," Sease said.

Historical Society museums open for summer

The Cohasset Historical Society's two summer museums at Elm Street, Cohasset Center, now are open for their regular summer season. The Capt. John Wilson Historical House and Maritime Museum are open each Tuesday through Sunday from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Admission is free and donations are welcome. The Capt. Wilson House will be open until Labor Day, and the Maritime Museum remains open through September.

The Capt. Wilson House, an 1810 sea-captain's home, is furnished with 19th-century artifacts from other early Cohasset homes, including furniture, furnishings, toys and other household equipment of that era.

Adjacent on Elm Street in the village is the Maritime Museum, once a ship chandlery for Samuel Bates' fishing fleet at Cohasset harbor.

Available at the Maritime Museum are the two volumes of Cohasset's history, the Rev. E.V. Bigelow's "Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset," vol. 1, and Burtram J. Pratt's vol. 2 of "Narrative-History."

The Cohasset Historical Society's phone number is (781) 383-1434.

Hagerty property plans are in the works, officials say

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Applications for permits have been sent to the Army Corps of Engineers and the Massachusetts Division of Waterways by the Hagerty committee, perhaps the first visible signs of progress toward the completion of a waterfront park on the property at the end of Parker Avenue.

The park is to include a 10-foot wide wooden walkway from the Hagerty property to Government Island, a dock for people to tie their boats to, and a picnic area.

"We've finished permitting locally, and sent the permits to the Army Corps of Engineers and the DEP [waterways permit] on July 21 and 22," said vice chairman Veneta Roebuck.

Prior to the meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad sent a letter to the committee on behalf of selectmen, asking to see some indication that plans for the park were going forward.

In the letter, Haddad wrote that if selectmen did not hear from the committee in the next couple of weeks, it would be necessary to appoint a new committee to ensure that the project is completed.

The letter enraged some of the committee members, but selectman Thomas Callahan tried to assuage their fears that the committee would be disbanded.

"There hasn't been serious talk about changing or getting rid of this committee," Callahan said. "People just don't see any signs of visible progress."

Callahan said that the committee needs to focus upon figuring out what its next step will be once the permitting process is completed.

"Respond to the selectmen by telling us what needs to done to finish the project," he told the committee. "You need to finish the permitting process, estimate what the costs will be, finalize your plans, and figure out how to pay for it."

In 1993, the town paid $495,000 for the property. Later that year, the Hagerty committee received $50,000 from an anonymous benefactor toward the establishment of the waterfront park, an amount which was matched by the Cohasset Conservation Trust.

Of that $100,000, only $54,000 remains, with much of the money used to demolish the former Cohasset Colonials furniture buildings.

Callahan said that the remaining $54,000 will assuredly not be enough to finish the project, making it even more important that the committee establish and finalize their plans for the park.

"Everyone thought the $495,000 appropriated by town meeting was going to be enough to finish the project," he said. "That's not going to be the case, obviously. What this committee needs to do is make its best estimate about what it will take to finish the project and bring it to town meeting."

Roebuck said that she asked Haddad if he had suggestions about what to do with the remaining funds now that the permits have been sent in.

"He said that we should concentrate on the parking lot," Roebuck said. "Get some costs and contract it out."

The parking lot is in complete disrepair and fixing and repaving it is high on Haddad's agenda.

Callahan suggested that the committee give serious thought to its next course of action, because the lack of funds left will precipitate the project being completed in stages, rather than all at once.

"You need to give some thought about how to phase the project," he said. "It isn't going to get done in one fell swoop and you may have to go to town meeting for a debt override."

Callahan also proposed that the committee look into the possibility of grant money, as town funds are extremely limited and it appears they will remain limited in the near future.

At the behest of committee member Russell Bonetti, the committee will elect new officers at its next meeting. Bonetti said that current committee chairman Alfred Moore, who is also chairman of the planning board, simply has too much on his plate to devote significant time to the completion of the park project.

New boathouse doors an issue

Historical commission says they don't fit the property

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The new glass double-doors which grace the side of the antique boathouse on the Hagerty property at the end of Parker Avenue are inconsistent with the building's historical character, said members of the historical commission at a brief meeting on Tuesday night to view the doors first hand.

The building is leased to the Cohasset Maritime Institute [CMI], a non-profit group which teaches youths about maritime activities as well as conducting community rowing sessions.

Historical commission chairman Noel Ripley said he wanted to talk to CMI president Jack Buckley, a teacher at Cohasset High School, to explain the problems which the commission has with the new doors.

"We don't want to jump down his throat," Ripley said. "We just want to explain why we feel the doors are not appropriate with the historical character of the boathouse."

CMI's lease specifically states that CMI will "work closely with the historical commission to ensure that any anticipated shingling, roofing , or any other exterior work on the boathouse meets with their approval and preserves the historical character of the structure."

The historical commission voted unanimously that the doors are inappropriate and historical commission member Hamilton Tewksbury suggested an alternative should the boathouse require double-doors.

"If an opening this size is needed, why not install two wooden, barn-style doors?" he said.

Buckley could not be reached for comment.

Some older residents must explore leaving Cohasset down housing in Cohasset, which is causing many in town to take notice.

"A lot of people are in the same boat," said selectman Diane Sullivan. "They want to downsize and move into a smaller home or condominium and there's almost nothing in Cohasset for them. I know of three people myself who are thinking about moving out of Cohasset because what they need isn't here."

Eileen Corbett, 266 S. Main St., has been looking for housing in town for her in-laws, who are 91 and 93 years old, and agreed with Sullivan about the lack of housing options for seniors in Cohasset.

"I can see this as a serious problem as people continue to live longer," she said. "People don't want the maintenance of a house, yet they can't let their houses go [in terms of up-keep] because it's usually their biggest asset."

Barbara Anglin, a member of the Board of Directors of Cohasset Elder Affairs [CEA], also sits on the CEA housing subcommittee and said that while some seniors in town have beautiful homes, their lifestyles are often far less luxurious than their homes might indicate.

"What happens is that people have a valuable asset in their homes, but they might still struggle to live," Anglin said. "You can sell your house, but then where are you going to go? There's nothing accessible in Cohasset for people who are house-rich and cash-poor."

What is unavailable in town is a development, which could be either private or public, that could serve seniors who have too much money to meet the income requirements to live at the publicly-funded senior housing on Elm St., but don't need the services available at Sunrise Assisted Living on Route 3A.

Sunrise provides home-like care for seniors who may be frail or memory impaired, but it is not a viable option for those seniors in town who do not need such services.

The only senior housing complex in town other than Sunrise are the condominiums on Elm Street, which are subsidized public housing and, as such, carry income restrictions.

To qualify for one of the 64 units of subsidized housing at Elm Street, one must be at least 60 years of age and have a yearly income which does not exceed $31,700, according to Cohasset Housing Authority administrator Marilyn LeBlanc.

Anglin said that one of the problems that inevitably arises when the words 'senior housing' are used is the connotation that a senior housing project means subsidized public housing, which she says is not what is most needed in Cohasset.

"We're not trying to push additional public housing," she said of the CEA housing subcommittee. "We're looking for creative options for seniors in that middle group between Elm Street and Sunrise (Assisted Living)."

One option that has been used in some other towns, and is currently being used in Scituate, is a zoning bylaw which allows seniors to create a separate apartment within their homes, allowing seniors to stay at their own homes but have someone else around to maintain the property.

"The bylaw is called an accessory zoning bylaw, and it can only be used by a person who is already living in a house," said Laura Harbottle, the Scituate Town Planner. "That person is allowed to create an apartment within their home, which is limited in size to 750 square feet or 40 percent of the main living area of the home."

Harbottle said she knew of some instances in Scituate where the bylaw, in had been used by seniors who wished to stay in their own homes.

"I know of a couple situations where a son-in-law or children move in and help seniors with chores or shopping," she said.

Harbottle said there is a limit in Scituate for 25 accessory dwelling apartments per year, but that they have never come close to reaching that number.

Anglin thought that Scituate's accessory zoning bylaw was a wonderful example of a town using all of its options to serve the housing needs of seniors.

"It shows such foresight and compassion and is a nice option for that middle person," she said. "There are restrictions such as the size of the apartments and how it's used, but they seem to be very reasonable."

While creating a smaller apartment in one's own home may be an attractive option for some seniors, such an option wouldn't solve the larger dilemma about the lack of a moderately-priced, condominium-type development that seems to be needed in town.

"Maybe an option we could consider would be unused municipal buildings or town land," said Anglin, who noted that she wasn't sure if apartments or condominiums would be the best answer.

"That has to be a town decision," she said. "The question we have to ask ourselves is 'What is the need?'"

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that there just aren't town buildings that are available and conducive to a senior housing development, including the Pratt library, which is to become vacant should plans go forward to build a new library at the old Osgood school.

"There really aren't any town buildings that would work as senior housing," he said. "The Pratt library won't work because there isn't any parking. That's one of the reasons the library is moving in the first place."

Though the old Osgood school seems to be on its way to becoming the new town library, there may still be a way to include some senior housing in the back of the school.

"There was a plan done by architect Jim Shipsky, which provides for a cluster of housing in the rear of the facility which could contain anywhere from 16 to 36 units," said Chris Ford, chairman of the Osgood reuse committee, which was disbanded following the town meeting vote to appropriate $156,000 for library construction drawings at the old Osgood school.

Ford said that he believed that senior housing units could coexist quite well with the new library.

"I'm not sure how enthusiastic the library trustees would be, but my own feeling is that it would be a nice use."

Library trustees chairman Patience Towle said she is not averse to senior housing in the rear of the old Osgood school.

"We don't have plans for the back of the building and we've heard a number of possibilities such as a day care center and senior housing," she said. "Nothing has been suggested that we wouldn't be open to."

Anglin is worried that more seniors will have to leave Cohasset if some kind of housing solution isn't found in the near future.

"I'm worried that we'll be in a crisis if we don't act soon," she said. "When you lose seniors, you lose volunteers, and you lose a lot of the history of the town. It's very important to keep a nice age balance in town."

Library trustees are forced to be patient

Application process for state grant to open in October

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Though they wish that they could start moving into the old Osgood school tomorrow, library trustees are excited by a supplemental budget passed by both the state senate and house of representatives that may significantly speed up the construction process.

"There has been a breakthrough in Cellucci's budget and the waiting list for library construction grants has been wiped out," said Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees. "What changes is that the funding process is accelerated by two years. We're much more optimistic now about this getting done within a couple of years."

Gov. Paul Cellucci's action will allow Cohasset and other towns wishing to build new public libraries to apply for $1.4 million library construction grants, beginning in October.

Towle said that the trustees have been working diligently to make sure that construction will be a fairly speedy process should the grant be awarded to Cohasset.

"We're trying to do everything that we can beforehand," she said. "We've been working with our architects on programs and design for the last eight months. We're also getting started on the lighting and finishing work."

Library director Janet Husband said that, as library construction programs go, Cohasset is already ahead of the game.

"Libraries just don't get built quickly," she said. "The important thing is that we are moving at the right direction at the right speed. Believe it or not, our library may reach completion faster than the majority of other library projects. Having Osgood to start with is a real plus and I hope people aren't getting impatient."

The fact that Cohasset has an existing building and detailed plans for its future library may be vitally important during the grant process, which should be highly competitive, due to the fact that a number of cities and towns are in the same boat in needing more space and more computer terminals.

"Everybody has got the same problems," Towle said. "Everyone has computers that weren't there before and doesn't have the space for the kind of terminals that a modern library necessitates."

Should a library construction grant be awarded to Cohasset in May 2000, trustees would have to go before town meeting, where approval would be needed for the use of the old Osgood school as the town library and for the balance of the funding necessary to complete the project, which should be about $1 million.

"There has been no formal commitment for the use or construction of the old Osgood school as the new town library," Towle said.

A special town meeting did appropriate $152,000 for library construction drawings in October 1998, and Towle said she feels the library trustees will once again be able to make a convincing argument to the town if they get the construction grant.

"I think we'll be able to separate ourselves from the schools and all the other groups in town which go before town meeting," she said. "We'll do our homework and let people know what they're going to get for the money. I think people will get a good feeling and see that the new library won't be hugely expensive."

Towle said that the trustees wanted to stay in the historic Pratt library, but that space and parking issues made that an impossibility.

> "We'll do our homework and let people know what they're going to get for the money. I think people will get a good feeling and see that the new library won't be hugely expensive."
> — Patience Towle,
> Library trustees chairman

"The normal cycle for a library building is 20 years," she said. Twenty years ago, nobody had planned on computers. We can't add on to the building because of the marsh behind us. We really struggled to stay."

Husband agreed that the lack of space at the current library made a new building a necessity.

"In order to be a modern, full-service library, we require a larger building and a larger parking lot," she said. In our new home at the renovated Osgood school, we'll have both."

Towle said she knows it is difficult for the people of Cohasset to see the old Osgood school sitting vacant and wait for the new library.

"I'm frustrated that we're not in there sanding the floors right now," she said. "But the construction project is an easy one to understand. We know what's involved and it should happen very quickly once we get the grant."

MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE NEWS

Middlebury College has sent us grand news about four of their Cohasset students and here they are (drum roll please) —

Samuel L. Goedecke, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter L. Goedecke, has attained dean's list status during the spring term at that college.

Sydney H. Johnston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Johnston, has been named a college scholar for academic excellence during the spring term at Middlebury. A college scholar represents the highest level of academic achievement at the liberal arts institution in Vermont.

Theodore W. Noon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas W. Noon, has been named a college scholar for academic excellence during the spring term at Middlebury College.

John J. Flanagan III, son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Flanagan Jr., has attained dean's list status during the spring term at that college.

Congratulations to all of you wonderful students; your hard work really paid off!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Two wonderful ladies celebrated their birthdays earlier this month, and we want to be sure that they know they have our best wishes! On July 8, Anne Campbell celebrated her 96th birthday, and on July 23, Olive Weisenfluh also turned 96.

Happy birthday greetings to you both!

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY

Speaking about celebrating special occasions, on Aug. 1 Mary and John Campbell celebrated their 63rd wedding anniversary!

That is a long time of true love and we are so happy for you! You are an inspiration, indeed!

GET WELL SOON

We sure hope that Norm Brown is on the mend after his recent bout with pneumonia, and that he is fit as a fiddle in no time!

FOOD PANTRY ITEMS SOUGHT

This is the time of year when everyone thinks heat, vacations, beach, boating — we also have to think beyond that and remember the food pantry that keeps going no matter what the weather or where we are! They need the following items: paper towels, dishwashing liquid, fruit juice, crackers, shampoo, Kleenex, detergent, bleach, jams and jellies, cookies and mayonnaise. Just drop them off at the pantry.

BOWDOIN GRADUATE

Mary Ellen Rayment was awarded a bachelor of arts degree at Bowdoin College during its 194th commencement exercises, with a major in sociology. Mary Ellen is a graduate of Cohasset Junior-Senior High School, and we are all very proud of her.

SISTER ACT

Nicole, Amanda and Valerie Farren find shelter from the sun after taking a dip at the Cohasset Swim Center pool.

DEAN'S LIST AT BU

Andrea E. Mercurio has recently been named to the dean's list at Boston University for the spring semester. Congratulations!

OFF TO TABOR

Skyler Ralston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ralston, will be entering Tabor Academy this fall as a member of the sophomore class. Skyler is currently participating in Tabor's "Orientation at Sea" program, which brings 12 to 14 students, Tabor faculty and Tabor student crew members together for six days of sailing, one exploring and learning along the coast of Maine. This program exposes incoming students to the ocean around us with a general introduction to oceanography, marine biology and related environmental issues.

Easy dishes that can be made ahead

A few weeks ago, we held a brunch at our house for the Class of 1959's 40th reunion..

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

I promised some of the attendees that I would print the recipes. They seemed to really enjoy them and wanted me to share them with all of you.

The beauty is that they can be made the night before (when it is cool), then just pop them in the oven and bake and serve!

NO-TURN OMELET

8 eggs, beaten
2 cups cooked crumbled sausage or cubed fully cooked ham
2 cups cubed process American cheese
2 cups milk
1 cup crushed saltines (about 24 crackers)
1/4 cup chopped onion
1/4 cup chopped green pepper
1/4 cup chopped sweet red pepper
1/4 to 1 teaspoon salt

Combine all ingredients in a large bowl; pour into a greased shallow 3-qt. or 9x13x2 inch baking dish. Bake, uncovered, at 350 degrees for 45 minutes or until a knife inserted near the center comes out clean. Let stand 5 mins. before serving. Yield: 8-10 servings.

HASH BROWN EGG BAKE

1 package (32 oz) frozen cubed hash brown potatoes, thawed
1 pound sliced bacon, cooked and crumbled
1 cup shredded cheddar cheese, divided
1/2 teaspoon salt
8 eggs
2 cups milk
dash paprika

In a large bowl, combine hash browns, bacon, 1/2 cup cheese and salt. Spoon into a greased 9x13x2 inch baking dish. In a bowl, beat eggs and milk until smooth; pour over hash brown mixture. Sprinkle with paprika. Bake uncovered, at 350 degrees for 45-50 minutes or until golden. Top with remaining cheese. Yield: 8 servings

EUROPEAN VACATION

Tom and Polly Doggett are trying hard to remember the nice, cool dampness they experienced in Putney Bridge, just outside London, less than a month ago. "We even slept under down comforters!" It was much the same throughout Switzerland, too.

The Doggetts were on a three-week vacation with their son, Dana, and his wife and five children. Home-based in a London suburb, they traveled the city via the underground and busses and walking. The Brits are big on walking! They found themselves getting right in step along with the best of them!

After that, a week of touring Switzerland on a luxurious bus was sheer delight for them all!

What a wonderful trip!!

VISIT THE FARMERS' MARKET

We took our granddaughters to the Farmers' Market this week, and did they have fun! Kelsie loved picking out a dozen ears of corn all by herself, and Tori is still talking about her pony ride, "the best!" Every week gets bigger and better, be sure to check it out for yourself on this, or any, Thursday.

GOOD NEWS WANTED!

That's the news from here, hopefully you will be able to get your "flash" to me, so we can all share your joy! Just give me a call or drop me a note!

Paws for concern

There's a lot to celebrate about summer. From sailing and fishing, to strolling our beautiful beaches, the perfect summer vacation is literally in our own backyard.

But summer is a trouble season for Scituate's Eleanor Haughey Animal Shelter (also serving Cohasset and Hull) which must deal annually with an enormous influx of unwanted or abandoned cats and kittens. Summer vacationers who may take in and begin feeding a stray or neighborhood kitten, often leave them behind along with their cottages when the summer is over.

The feral cat population is on the rise, and families which put off or refuse to pay to have their felines spayed or neutered add to the growing problem.

Last month the worst of the summertime cat scenarios happened twice. A week after two teenagers discovered four starving and flea infested kittens zipped in a duffel bag and dumped in a cranberry bog in Scituate's West End — two women found two five-week old felines stuffed in a paper bag and left along the road in North Scituate. While such cruel cases are rare, they are upsetting when they occur.

Fortunately all six cats are on the mend and have tested negative for both feline aids and leukemia. Two of the litter of four (appropriately named for the bog in which they were found "Cranapple, Ocean Spray, Sea Breeze, and Madras) have been adopted and the shelter's dedicated staff is working hard to find homes for the others. But the kittens are joined by dozens of other cats and kittens either housed at the shelter or in foster care homes.

As of today, director Joan McCafferty said 45 adult cats are living at the shelter and another 50 were placed in foster care until they're old enough for adoption. Shelter veterinarian Patricia Hess makes sure all of the cats are up to date on shots and disease-free prior to adoptions.

With another month of summer ahead, Ms. McCafferty urges pet owners to do the responsible thing and have their animals spayed or neutered.

If expense is a problem, the Standish Humane Society in Duxbury offers low or no-cost neutering and spaying. The shelter is looking into grant programs that could bring a free spay and neutering program to Scituate. Ms. McCafferty also cautions local citizens to think carefully about the care and expense involved with pet ownership before saying "yes" to keeping an adorable little kitten.

To place or adopt a cat or kitten please call the Scituate animal shelter at 545-8703. For information on spaying and neutering call the Standish Humane Society at (781) 834-4663.

Cohasset Trucks with Character

First in a series of what makes Cohasset unique

Manuel Salvador bought his new 1968 Ford short bed pickup for about $1,900 at Good Ford in Hingham at their dealership on the harbor. It has 76,000 original miles, was used for lobster fishing and has only been out of town maybe three times. It has a three speed manual stick shift on the steering column, a six-cylinder engine and has never had a cigarette in the ashtray. Mrs. Salvador says she thinks he cares more for the truck than he does for her.

GOP chairman Janet Fogarty announces Cohasset cookout Aug. 29

Newly-elected Cohasset GOP chairman Janet Fogarty announced that, following a tradition, the renowned grill cooks for the annual Cohasset cookout to be held Sunday, Aug. 29, 4:30 to 7:30 p.m., at the seaside home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Rd., will be Mark Baker, Bill Grimm, Peter Guild, Christy Mihos and Sam Pease. Other assisting chefs will be Pat Buckley, R. Murray Campbell, Lillian Curley, Ray Kasperowicz, Kevin O'Donnell, Nancy O'Toole, Douglas Peck, Edythe Ford, Marjorie C. Smith, Robert Spofford, Grace Tuckerman, Dan and Judy Volungis, George Watts Jr., Edward F. Woods, Joanne F. Young and Avis Sweeney.

Donation is $25 per person and those interested may call Janet Fogarty at 383-3036, Julie Guild at 383-6443 or Polly Logan at 383-0031.

Highlights will include meeting and hearing Lt. Governor Jane Swift, new GOP State Chair Brian Cresta of Wakefield, Senator and Weymouth Mayoral Candidate Bob Hedlund, GOP House Leader Fran Marini of Hansen, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset, Sheriff Peter Forman of Plymouth, D.A. Mike Sullivan of Abington, Rep. Vinny Demacedo of Plymouth and County Commissioner Robert Stone of Whitman.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on three roll calls from recent debate on the Senate version of a $20.8 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. The House and Senate have yet to agree on a final version of the budget.

FUEL EXCISE TAX AND BUSSES(S 2000) Senate 30-9, rejected an amendment providing that the state reimburse private bus companies the estimated $550,000 which the companies spend annually on the state's 24 cents per gallon gas excise tax. Amendment supporters said this reimbursement had been in effect for 25 years until it was cancelled during the economic crisis of 1990. They noted the reimbursement allows the bus industry to reduce overhead and maintain affordable rates and argued this will lead to increased bus use, reduced traffic and less pollution. Amendment opponents said these companies are doing quite well in today's economy and argued a $550,000 tax reduction is unnecessary. (A "Yea" vote is for the $550,000 reimbursement. A "Nay" vote is against it).

Senator	Representative

TITLE 5(S 2000) Senate 29-10, rejected an amendment requiring city council or town meeting approval of home septic system repair standards, established by local boards of health after 1997, which exceed the state's Title 5 standards. Title 5 mandates that homeowners who want to sell their homes have their septic systems inspected and requires repairs if the system does not meet state standards. Currently, local boards of health, without city council or town meeting approval, may simply impose their own tougher standards. Amendment supporters said this local control amendment will give voters, rather than a narrow board of health, control over these local regulations which often cost homeowners thousands of dollars. They noted city council or town meeting approval is already required for things like zoning changes. Amendment opponents said the amendment takes power away from local boards of health. They argued the amendment should not be slipped into the state budget but should should be filed as a separate bill which goes through the process of public hearings. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment requiring city council or town meeting approval of regulations which exceed the state ones. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

RAPID RESPONSE SPECIALIST(S 2000) Senate 39-0, approved an amendment earmarking $87,000 from the state's department of labor and workforce development budget to fund a full-time AFL-CIO rapid response labor specialist. Amendment supporters said this specialist helps workers by going into plants which are closing and assessing the skills of employees who are about to be laid off. They noted the specialist then coordinates their reassignment or refers them for retraining and education in order to get them right back into the workforce. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment).

If expense is a problem, the Standish Humane Society in Duxbury offers low or no-cost neutering and spaying. The shelter is looking into grant programs that could bring a free spay and neutering program to Scituate. Ms. McCafferty also cautions local citizens to think carefully about the care and expense involved with pet ownership before saying "yes" to keeping an adorable little kitten.

To place or adopt a cat or kitten please call the Scituate animal shelter at 545-8703. For information on spaying and neutering call the Standish Humane Society at (781) 834-4663.

Cohasset Trucks with Character

First in a series of what makes Cohasset unique

Manuel Salvador bought his new 1968 Ford short bed pickup for about $1,900 at Good Ford in Hingham at their dealership on the harbor. It has 76,000 original miles, was used for lobster fishing and has only been out of town maybe three times. It has a three speed manual stick shift on the steering column, a six-cylinder engine and has never had a cigarette in the ashtray. Mrs. Salvador says she thinks he cares more for the truck than he does for her.

GOP chairman Janet Fogarty announces Cohasset cookout Aug. 29

Newly-elected Cohasset GOP chairman Janet Fogarty announced that, following a tradition, the renowned grill cooks for the annual Cohasset cookout to be held Sunday, Aug. 29, 4:30 to 7:30 p.m., at the seaside home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Rd., will be Mark Baker, Bill Grimm, Peter Guild, Christy Mihos and Sam Pease. Other assisting chefs will be Pat Buckley, R. Murray Campbell, Lillian Curley, Ray Kasperowicz, Kevin O'Donnell, Nancy O'Toole, Douglas Peck, Edythe Ford, Marjorie C. Smith, Robert Spofford, Grace Tuckerman, Dan and Judy Volungis, George Watts Jr., Edward F. Woods, Joanne F. Young and Avis Sweeney.

Donation is $25 per person and those interested may call Janet Fogarty at 383-3036, Julie Guild at 383-6443 or Polly Logan at 383-0031.

Highlights will include meeting and hearing Lt. Governor Jane Swift, new GOP State Chair Brian Cresta of Wakefield, Senator and Weymouth Mayoral Candidate Bob Hedlund, GOP House Leader Fran Marini of Hansen, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset, Sheriff Peter Forman of Plymouth, D.A. Mike Sullivan of Abington, Rep. Vinny Demacedo of Plymouth and County Commissioner Robert Stone of Whitman.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen

QUESTIONS	Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413E	Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) (617) 722-2400 Room 134
THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on three roll calls from recent debate on the Senate version of a $20.8 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. The House and Senate have yet to agree on a final version of the budget.
FUEL EXCISE TAX AND BUSSES(S 2000) Senate 30-9, rejected an amendment providing that the state reimburse private bus companies the estimated $550,000 which the companies spend annually on the state's 24 cents per gallon gas excise tax. Amendment supporters said this reimbursement had been in effect for 25 years until it was cancelled during the economic crisis of 1990. They noted the reimbursement allows the bus industry to reduce overhead and maintain affordable rates and argued this will lead to increased bus use, reduced traffic and less pollution. Amendment opponents said these companies are doing quite well in today's economy and argued a $550,000 tax reduction is unnecessary. (A "Yea" vote is for the $550,000 reimbursement. A "Nay" vote is against it).	Y	N
TITLE 5(S 2000) Senate 29-10, rejected an amendment requiring city council or town meeting approval of home septic system repair standards, established by local boards of health after 1997, which exceed the state's Title 5 standards. Title 5 mandates that homeowners who want to sell their homes have their septic systems inspected and requires repairs if the system does not meet state standards. Currently, local boards of health, without city council or town meeting approval, may simply impose their own tougher standards. Amendment supporters said this local control amendment will give voters, rather than a narrow board of health, control over these local regulations which often cost homeowners thousands of dollars. They noted city council or town meeting approval is already required for things like zoning changes. Amendment opponents said the amendment takes power away from local boards of health. They argued the amendment should not be slipped into the state budget but should should be filed as a separate bill which goes through the process of public hearings. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment requiring city council or town meeting approval of regulations which exceed the state ones. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).	Y	N
RAPID RESPONSE SPECIALIST(S 2000) Senate 39-0, approved an amendment earmarking $87,000 from the state's department of labor and workforce development budget to fund a full-time AFL-CIO rapid response labor specialist. Amendment supporters said this specialist helps workers by going into plants which are closing and assessing the skills of employees who are about to be laid off. They noted the specialist then coordinates their reassignment or refers them for retraining and education in order to get them right back into the workforce. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment).	Y	Y committee would have to get the approval of selectmen to use the land for an addition to Woodside.

Number of available grave sites is looking up in town

"We'll see whether the selectmen want to go ahead," Pratt said. "If they do, we can have construction drawings for the property ready in a few months, probably by the end of the year."

The land which Pratt mentions is located near Graham Waste Services on Route 3A and would have room for 584 graves and 400 columbaria, which are places for cremation urns.

Pratt said the cemetery committee already has an application in to the conservation commission, but he doesn't think wetlands issues should cause a problem.

"The land we're looking at is situated up on a hill, so the wetlands shouldn't be an issue," he said.

While the cemetery committee has been working on the problem of finding additional cemetery space, they have also reconfigured and spruced up the Beechwood cemetery.

"Since the 1997 report we made to selectmen on the need to create more usable space at Beechwood, we have accounted for all of the unused space and now have 330 graves available for sale at Beechwood," said Pratt.

The proposed addition to Woodside cemetery and Beechwood improvements would give Cohasset over 800 usable grave sites, which Pratt said could last Cohasset nearly 20 years.

"We use approximately 40 graves a year," he said. "If we have 800 graves available in town, then we should be doing well for a couple of decades."

Pratt said the additional space would also allow people to pre-pay for a grave site in town, which he said hasn't been able to happen in recent years in Cohasset due to the lack of available cemetery space.

"For 10 years, you haven't been able to buy a cemetery plot unless a death had occurred," he said. "It's not fair what we've been making people do. It's been a hassle and a half to get a plot, and that isn't what people need in a time of grief."

"If we have 800 graves available in town, then we should be doing well for a couple of decades."

— Glenn Pratt, cemetery committee

Pratt said that besides the piece of mind that pre-paying for a grave site could give Cohasset families during a time of grief, pre-paying would also bring income to the town which could be used to fund future cemetery construction projects.

According to the 1997 report on the Beechwood cemetery, grave sales had been slow over the last half century, which led the cemetery committee to look for ways to make the cemetery a more attractive option for families looking for a place to bury their loved ones.

"We spent a lot of money to upgrade the look of Beechwood," Pratt said. "We reseeded, cut shrubs, and planted hedges, and we think the changes have added a lot in making the cemetery more attractive."

Pratt said that the town has to create cemetery space because of a law enacted in 1930 which says that all cemeteries in Massachusetts must be municipally owned or owned by a non-profit agency.

"There are no private cemeteries in Massachusetts unless they were grandfathered in before the law came into effect," he said. "The idea was to eliminate get-rich-quick schemes where someone would sell a number of grave sites and then leave town, without providing money to upkeep the cemetery," he said.

Though it is not municipally owned, Cohasset Central Cemetery adheres to the law because it is run by a non-profit board of directors.

"The Central cemetery was a town cemetery until 1860, when it was taken over by a private group of trustees," said David Wadsworth, a member of the Central cemetery board of directors.

Students conduct infrared study of Little Harbor

Findings will help identify sources of pollution

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Rising at a time when most people haven't even considered waking up yet, a number of Cohasset High School students met Board of Health and Lobster Lab member Stephen Bobo at 4:45 a.m. last Tuesday to conduct an infrared survey of Little Harbor.

The infrared survey has to be done before the sun comes up because sunlight interferes with the wavelengths of light which the infrared device measures.

"The infrared camera looks like a camcorder," said Lobster Lab president Kevin Ulmer. "The difference is that while a camcorder is sensitive to the visible range of wavelengths, which is what can be seen by the naked eye, the infrared camera is sensitive to wavelengths that can't be seen normally."

The purpose of the infrared survey is to measure changes in the temperature of the shoreline which may be caused by the inflow of pollution.

According to Bobo, the infrared camera takes pictures of the shoreline and can identify the temperature of areas of a square foot on the shore to an accuracy of about a half degree Fahrenheit.

"The infrared camera allows you to survey large areas very easily and expands the ability to accurately pinpoint possible areas of pollution," Ulmer said.

"Changes in temperature are a possible indicator of effluent from septic system around the water. It might signal pollution, though it could also be sprinkler system leakage from houses near the shoreline. What it definitely shows is that something is entering the water."

By 6:30, the students had taken infrared and photographic images from the causeway to Atlantic Avenue, Cat Dam, the Sherbrookes' garden, and many other sites along the shoreline.

The survey continued until noon and was completed on Wednesday. In two days, the infrared system covered the same shoreline it took two weeks to cover on foot.

"The results of the infrared survey will be included as part of the final report of Camp Dresser McKee [the contractor hired by the town for the Little Harbor study]," Ulmer said.

Bobo said that reduction of the data will take about a month, and will result in a table giving the temperature to within a quarter degree Fahrenheit at one foot intervals around the entire shoreline of Little Harbor.

The students, who have been contributing to the Little Harbor study thanks to a grant from the state Office of Environmental Affairs, will continue to help the town by taking water quality samples in Little Harbor for the rest of the summer, albeit during more normal hours.

The high school team conducting the infrared study, from L-R, Pattie McGrail, Brendan Michaud, Sarah Bertovich and Bea Rankin.

Support grows to add subdivision to Wompatuck

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Arrowood Development in Scituate could become of one of the most beautiful subdivisions on the South Shore. The developers plan to place 18 house lots on 50 acres of beautiful land that is right next to Wompatuck State Park. For some people, that's the problem with Arrowood: it abuts the state park. Opponents of the project want the state to buy Arrowood and add the land to Wompatuck. Cohasset officials oppose the subdivision because it is close to the town's public drinking water supply, and carries the threat of contamination from pesticides and storm water runoff..

A Scituate resident, Vincent Bucca, has been urging the Department of Environmental Management to purchase the land. And the developers, Walter and Mark Winchester, have indicated a willingness to sell the land to the state. There's just one problem: the asking price is more than $1 million and climbing. DEM doesn't have the money, Scituate doesn't have the money, and Cohasset certainly doesn't have the money.

But state officials have offered some hope to residents of Cohasset and Scituate. Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand sent a letter to Bucca expressing support for the project. Durand has instructed DEM to meet with officials from Cohasset and Scituate to discuss a joint land protection effort. David McGowan, a DEM Land Acquisition Specialist overseeing the possible purchase of Arrowood, could not be reached for comment. Also, state legislators are taking up a bill in budget discussions to transfer $1 million to the Executive Office of environmental Affairs for the purchase of Arrowood.

> "We're going to meet with DEM next week to discuss our options."
> — Town Manager Mark Haddad

"We're going to meet with DEM next week to discuss our options," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "I just want to remind everyone that Cohasset cannot afford to spend any money for this land."

Scituate residents have been trying without success to get the state to purchase the Arrowood land since 1996. But the developer can't sit on his investment forever. In the past six months, the developer has added a road and a septic system to the property. And property values are still increasing throughout the South Shore. The $1 million price tag could go even higher.

"The work being done at the subdivision is only going to add to the cost," said Water Commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. "I run into Mark Winchester occasionally and he said he's interested if he gets a good offer. He did show his plans to the water commission and while it's not the best place for a development, it seems that he and the town of Scituate hasdone a great job of protecting the watershed."

Scituate successfully placed a number of protective restrictions on the project. A deed restriction bans the use of pesticides on the land. The purchase and sales agreements contain provisions allowing the Scituate Conservation Agent to go on t he land for regular inspections. The drainage system will divert water away from the town's water supply.

"There are a lot of positive water protection measures built into this project, and that's great," McNabb said.

Six months ago, Cohasset's state representatives expressed support for the Arrowood purchase, but their first priority at that time was obtaining money for sea walls in South Shore communities plagued by flooding.

McNabb said he hopes the state will approve the funding for the land quickly.

"Hopefully, Secretary Durand's letter to Mr. Bucca means something will happen soon," McNabb said. "If we don't move soon, it could be too late to stop development. It's much easier to buy land without foundations or houses."

COHASSET SPORTS

Swimmers on hot streak

By Barbara Orsini Linn
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Not just the weather . . . the Cohasset swim team was hot as well against the Duxbury recreation swim team July 30, as they kicked off their competition with this team. Cohasset's confidence was obvious, but never taking their terrific skills for granted. The Cohasset swim team didn't want another one of those "almost wins," as they experienced with the Marshfield Masks recently. However, the Masks, too, were almost beaten by this outstanding team of swimmers!

Cohasset is just a fabulous swim team!

THE SCORE: Cohasset 385, Aqua-Dux 211!

Like their Team "Cheer" Cohasset never forgets to "Go Fight!"

Congratulations, Cohasset, on a fine win!

This was a meet with some "funnies," too, with false starts and start-overs, as well as Erik Poh tangling with a most annoying lane divider as he swam the first race of the day (Boys 8 and Under Medley Relay)! And, Chris Kuppens stopping mid-race, bobbing his head up and, then, realizing an "oops," we're still swimming in the 10 and Under Freestyle/50! These swimmers can certainly bring a smile to any observer, making it all worth the while!

Well, at least the meet was not called off due to oppressive heat. However, we can all attest to just how hot it became! Halfway through the meet a "time-out" was called, so that everyone could take a dip in the pool, albeit mostly the competitors — a nice chance to cool off. More than three-quarters through the meet, we were all feeling like "are we done?" It was hot; thankfully, there was a breeze that allowed us to persevere.

When we heard the "cheer" by Cohasset honoring the fine Duxbury recreation swim team. . . we knew we were done.

Please, give me a popsicle!

And here's the Cohasset swim team's "Lean/Mean Swimming Machine line-up:

Boys 8 and Under Medley Relay/100:

First Place Team: Erik Poh, Ian Porter, Jon Speed and Jon Plante, a fine swim!

Second Place Team: Patrick Hurley, Ryan Daly, Graham Stevenson and Brendan Doonan — way to go, guys!

Girls 8 and Under Medley Relay/100:

This relay belonged to Cohasset with their 1, 2, 3 team wins!

First Place Team: Claire McCarthy, Sam Lehr, Sally Meehan and Kaitlin Mahoney.

Second Place Team: Ashling Kearns, Natalie Hunt, Katelyn Ryan and Kelsey Coughlin.

Third Place Team: Brittany Dunn, Meghan Jennings, Allison Costa and Ellie Baumgarten.

Congratulations on your terrific performance!

Boys 10 — Medley Relay/100: This was a very fast race — awesome!

First Place Team: Ryan Poh, Nick Zappolo, Reed Dickenson and Alexander Hunt.

Third Place Team: Colin Conway, Cliff Musto, Cameron Cunningham and Patrick Doonan.

Fourth Place Team: Brent Daly, Tyler Kelly, John McCarthy and Alex Shipp.

Girls 10 Medley Relay/100: Wow! Another 1, 2, 3 team wins!

First Place Team: Emma Hernan, Mary Previte, Caren Garber and Michaela Poole.

Second Place Team: Kristen Dooley, Meg Anderson, Kaleigh Swain and Anna Speed.

Third Place Team: Michelle Madge, Abigail Markert, Alyssa Campbell and Remy Lee.

The Cohasset swim team, fresh off its home win over the Duxbury Recreation team, will go for a clean sweep against the Duxbury Yacht Club Friday at Duxbury.

You are fabulous in the water!

Boys 11/12 Medley Relay/100:

Second Place Team: Willie McCarthy, Zach Markert, Parker Berg and Jake Previte.

Third Place Team: Evan Sacks, Zach Etkind, Daniel McCarthy and Colin Regan.

They were "swimming machines," holding 2nd and 3rd here!

Girls 11/12 Medley Relay/100:

First Place Team: Jenna Larson, Casey Anderson, Becca Lehr and Callie Ernst.

Third Place Team: Melissa Crowley-Buck, Brooke Harrington, Charlotte Sida and Sarah Lambert.

Fourth Place Team: Carrie Muir, Courtney Hurley, Caitlin O'Connell and Whitney Condon.

Boys 17 and Under Medley Relay/200:

First Place Team: Chris Flynn, Bryan Bilton, Rob Lehr and Jodi Roach — Cohasset's finest male "Lean/Mean Swimming Machines!" Congratulations!

Girls 17 and Under Medley Relay/200:

First Place Team: Alison Berg, Kate O'Brien, Caroline Carter and Cara Foley.

Third Place Team: Alexis Bugley, Yasmine Afshar, Elisa Jerome and Delia Regan.

Fourth Place Team: Meghan Marr, Kate Grimm, Melissa Orsini and Anna Roche.

Cohasset's finest female "Lean/Mean Swimming Machines!" A well-deserved congratulations!

Boys 9/10 Freestyle/50:

Second Place: Nick Zappolo — not much distance between 1st and 2nd — a terrific swim!

Third Place: Colin Conway — way to go!

And, Fourth Place was held by John Coffey.

Girls 9/10 Freestyle/50:

First Place: Caren Garber — You were well ahead of Aqua-Dux who took 2nd. — Great Swim!

Third Place: Michaela Poole — Second Place was almost won!

Fourth Place: Anna Speed — Good job in holding this position!

Boys 11/12 - I.M./100:

Second Place: Parker Berg — Terrific try for first!

Third Place: Zach Etkind — You were right there trying for 2nd - almost had it!

Colin Regan — Hey, buddy, you got disqualified — you would have been in 4th place.

Girls 11/12 - I.M./100:

Second Place: Jenna Larson — you almost captured 1st place!

Fourth Place: Sarah Lambert — a fine swim! Congratulations!

The South Shore's Orange Crush Wrestling Club has steadily vaulted into the biggest and best organization of its kind in New England.

So just how good is the Cohasset-based club?

The name "Dream Team Wrestling Club" would hardly be a stretch for the 123-member team.

With some of the best wrestlers from 16 local towns, ranging from eighth grade to college senior, Orange Crush has built up an impressive resume since being founded in 1996 by former Clemson University wrestler Mike Kenney of Whitman.

Kenney, who is also the assistant coach and recruiting coordinator for the Bridgewater State College wrestling team, grew up in Pittsburgh, what he terms as the "hotbed of high school wrestling."

The former Weymouth High assistant saw plenty of great high school wrestlers on the South Shore but no organized club in which to stay sharp during the off season. It was then that Kenney decided to go ahead with starting the Orange Crush.

"I realize what it takes to be a champion, and that's off-season work," Kenney said. "And I saw a need for it on the South Shore."

With the South Shore emerging as the "hotbed" of high school wrestling in Massachusetts, thanks to the success of teams including Weymouth, Cohasset, Whitman-Hanson and Rockland, many of the area's best grapplers have turned to Orange Crush to sharpen their skills for the high school and college seasons. And the best way to sharpen and perfect those skills is to compete in open wrestling meets. Orange Crush has not only competed, the team has dominated.

This summer has been a busy one for Orange Crush. The club has competed in 16 tournaments throughout six states, winning, among other tourneys, the Bridgewater State Dual Challenge.

After finishing third in 1996, Orange Crush went on to win the next three New England Wrestling Club championships and boasts the best high school wrestler in Massachusetts history in Rockland's Mark Laramee.

"The future of the club is excellent. The kids come through in groups of six or seven. I always like to start training in seventh or eighth grade..."
ORANGE CRUSH COACH MIKE KENNEY

The four-time state champion is ranked No. 7 on the all-time high school list in the United States. His 209 are the most ever by a Massachusetts schoolboy wrestler.

Laramee is one member of a dream lineup for any wrestling club coach. The team includes several savvy wrestlers who have racked up some impressive honors: Four New England champions, 14 New England place winners, eight All-State champions, 27 All-State place winners, 18 state champions, 58 state place winners, 41 sectional champions, 22 freestyle state champions, 16 Greco-Roman state champions, two All-Americans, 12 Ocean State Games individual winners, 17 college wrestlers.

On top of that, more than 20 of Orange Crush's wrestlers have competed in a national tournament.

"I'd put an all-star team from my club against any all-star team," Kenney said.

Weymouth's Dave Sheridan, the team's best international style grappler, is a two-time double champion at the Ocean State championships and has garnered five state titles in Freestyle and Greco wrestling.

Orange Crush also dominated the Mass. All-Star Select Team with 18 of the club's grapplers making up the elite, 35-member team. The team took home first place in the Greco-Roman division and third in the Freestyle Olympic category. The competition was hardly soft with some of the best wrestlers from N.Y., N.J., Ohio, Vt., N.H., R.I. and Canada wrestling for top honors.

Sheridan, Craig Buckley of Cohasset and Marshfield's Barry Wilson were all double individual champions. The team also showcased some of its younger wrestlers, and they didn't miss the opportunity to perform well. Eighth-grader Frank Sforza of Rockland won the individual Freestyle championship.

Sforza and Cohasset's Brian Litchfield, also an eighth grader, were selected to the eighth-grade Elite Select All-Star squad of Massachusetts and finished undefeated in the team's 60-59 win over Connecticut in June at Worcester Poly-Tech Institute.

Kenney couldn't be happier with the progress of the young talent on Orange Crush.

"The future of the club is excellent," he said. "The kids come through in groups of six or seven. I always like to start training in seventh or eighth grade.

The Monday and Wednesday night workouts at Cohasset High are attended by about 45 to 50 of the "die-hard kids" during the summer months. That number increases upwards to 90 as the wrestling season draws closer.

There is no shortage of meets in the summer months, in fact, the opposite is true. Orange Crush members can compete in a summer's worth of tournaments equivalent to two full school wrestling seasons. The extra work is a major plus, and Kenney has the opportunity to focus on areas where his grapplers need improving.

And when you practice with wrestlers the caliber of those on Orange Crush, it's tough not to become a better grappler and a fierce competitor come match time.

CEF Golf and Tennis Tournament is Monday

By Mary Sheppard
FOR THE COHASSET EDUCATION FOUNDATION

Michael Hurley has been president of the Cohasset Education Foundation for the past five years. He is also the father of nine children, all public school students, a role he's held for even longer.

In addition to major fundraising events he has presided over, such as the annual CEF spelling bees, progressive dinners, and upcoming Millenium Party, Hurley is co-chairing the Second Annual Golf and Tennis Tournament Monday, Aug. 9, at the Cohasset Golf Club.

Hurley said he believes that fundraising should be fun for everybody, especially board members.

"It's hard to stay committed to a cause. There are meetings on cold winter nights after a work day when you'd rather stay home. Phone calls to people, working on committees, coming up with creative ideas that excite the other board members, etc. . . . and when you belong to an organization that doesn't have an endowment, you have to 'earn money the hard way,'" he said. "Creating exciting ways in which to do it is just the beginning of the challenge. Then, you have to perform, make it happen, and it's easier to do when you make it fun."

Hurley feels he is part of a member board who add their personalities, resources and imaginations to the work of fundraising. He also feels strongly about supporting public schools.

"This country was built on public school education," he said. "And, it doesn't stop there. Students today, public and private, need the learning tools that will prepare them for the world economy. It's impossible to depend upon tax dollars and community votes for schools to get what they need. It's not that taxpayers don't want to support their public schools, but rather that they have to be concerned about other places where their tax dollars go. That's where school support organizations like the Cohasset Education Foundation come into play, that's how we can help ... by focusing on one educational need at a time, usually a major project, and raising the money and creating the resources to make it happen."

"This is going to be a best-placed ball tournament. Handicaps won't necessarily be the divining rod."
— Michael Hurley, CEF president

The CEF's 2nd Annual Golf and Tennis Tournament is a result of Hurley's past tournament experience in his home state of New York, when he co-sponsored a similar event with his business partner.

He chuckled as he explained that his partner at the time was a "serious golfer," and did most of the organizing.

"I'm more of a duffer and wasn't as involved or helpful as he. I did remember the turnout, the fun everyone had, and the funds we raised from it. I decided last year to try it here and it was a great success for being our start-up tourney. This year, people are back for more."

Despite small glitches in the organization of the tournament that were quickly identified and remedied, the Cohasset Education Foundation's plans for a great day of golf at the Cohasset club are in place.

"The game, though, has been set up differently this year," Hurley explained. "This is going to be a best-placed ball tournament. Handicaps won't necessarily be the divining rod."

Hurley explained that each team will shoot from the position of the best-placed ball at each hole. Every golfer will play each hole. The tournament winner will have the best score per hole.

"We're going back to the honor system on tournament day," Hurley said. "Of course, this is after last year when there were guys switching carts and bags around after everything had been set up on the board. Using the honor system means not having the best golfer in each foursome be used to exclusively place a best ball at each hole. This should give everyone a chance to be a hero that day," he said.

Cohasset's public schools are receiving generous support in the number of hole sponsorships this year. Those sponsors include Rockland Trust Company, Talbots, Forester, Inc., Bank Boston, G. W. Wade Investment Counselors, Creative Office Pavilion, Allied American Insurance Company, and Fulham, Hurley & Company. These are all area-based businesses.

Slots to play have been steadily filling up, but there are still openings, according to Hurley.

"If you want to play and don't have a foursome, don't worry about it. We'll fit you in. If you have a foursome and want to play, it's not too late to call. It's a great course, a good cause and guaranteed entertainment," he said.

For more information, call Michael Hurley at (781) 383-9509 or (800) 557-0428 or Steve Gaumer at (781) 383-6343 or (800) 235-1205.

Blueberry Festival slated

The public is invited to a Blueberry Festival at the Beechwood Church on Saturday, Aug. 14, at 6:30 p.m. Blueberry delights will be served. A free-will offering would be appreciated. For entertainment, a Pound Auction will be held.

Knights of Columbus join Heritage Days

On Saturday, Aug. 7, the Scituate Knights of Columbus will again sponsor the Heritage Days Family Cookout/Pig Roast. This annual event will be held at the K of C Council hall on Route 3A in Scituate (across from PJ'S Country House).

For the ninth consecutive year, Deputy Grand Knight Jeff Palmer will roast a 250-pound pig, which will be wood smoked for nearly 24 hours before serving. Served along with the roast pork will be smoked turkey and smoked fish, as well as traditional barbecue items such as hot dogs, hamburgers, Italian sausage and fresh corn on the cob.

The K of C pool will be open for this family event and is included in the price of admission. Admission is $9 for adults and $3 for children under 13; a family of five or more is admitted for $25. The fun begins at 3 p.m. on Saturday, with the carving and serving of the pig commencing at 4 p.m.

A Lifetime of Achievement.
I've accomplished a lot in my lifetime that I am happy about. As a teacher, then Dean for the School of Nursing at Boston College for 26 years, I not only challenged the system by being a woman, but was instrumental in developing the school's curriculum and its tradition for excellence.
At the age of 91 I still get around; occasionally I need a little assistance. HERITAGE AT HINGHAM, an Assisted Living Community, has a caring and friendly staff that are always available should I need them. HERITAGE AT HINGHAM is a beautiful community and a special place to live.
HERITAGE AT HINGHAM offers many services including:
• Rental apartments
• Social and cultural activities
• 3 delicious meals served daily
• 24-hour staffing
• Personal care assistance
• Exercise programs
For more information on the Assisted Living lifestyle found at HERITAGE AT HINGHAM, please call Courtnie Graybill at 781-749-3322.

OBITUARIES

Bonnie B. Olson

Bonnie B. (Bretemitz) Olson, retired antiques dealer, of Duxbury, died July 27 in Brigham and Women's Hospital of complications arising from myelodysplasia. She was 83.

Born in North Platte, Neb., Mrs. Olson graduated from North Platte High School and received her bachelor of arts degree from the University of Chicago in 1947. She was a longtime resident of Colorado Springs, Col., before moving to Cohasset, and then Duxbury, in the late 1980s.

Before World War II, she was deputy clerk of the Lincoln County Court in North Platte, Neb. During the war, she was a caseworker for American Red Cross, serving in Chicago, Ill.; Sacramento, Calif.; and Amarillo, Texas. Following the war, she was executive secretary for Econometrica, the Cowles Commission for Research, in Chicago, Ill.

After moving to Colorado Springs, Col., in 1954, Mrs. Olson was an active member of numerous civic groups and served as an officer or director for several organizations, including: Colorado Springs and the state of Colorado: Colorado Springs Community Council, Colorado Springs Charter Association, Colorado Springs Chapter of American Red Cross, Colorado Springs District Attorney's Child Abuse Task Force, Colorado Springs Human Relations Committee, El Paso County PTA, Protective Services for Children; Colorado State Children's Law Committee, Colorado Child Welfare Department, Children's Advocacy Committee; and Colorado Governor's Conference on Aging.

Boston: Radcliffe College Career Services, panelist in career planning documentary film, "Not Just a Job."

Nationally: White House Conference on Children and Youth, delegate in 1960 and 1970; White House Conference on Aging, observer in 1981.

Awards and Citations: University of Chicago Alumni Citation for Public Service, 1961; Lane Bryant National Awards Citation, 1971.

Mrs. Olson was married for more than 40 years to the late O. Donald Olson (Maj. Gen. USAFR) and leaves a daughter, Pamela L. Olson of Duxbury; a son, Douglas D. "Buzz" Olson of Hingham; and three grandchildren, Elizabeth H. Olson, Kevin D. Olson and Alexander D. Olson, all of Hingham.

Mrs. Olson was buried Aug. 3 at Arlington National Cemetery in Arlington, Va.

Donations in Mrs. Olson's memory may be made to St. Jude's Ranch for Children, P.O. Box 60100, Boulder City, Nev. 89006.

A memorial service will be held in Hingham at a time to be announced.

Fr. Paul J. Evich, O.S.B.

Fr. Paul J. Evich, O.S.B., 75, monk of Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham, died peacefully at the Abbey on the evening of Wednesday, July 28, after a long illness.

Fr. Paul was the son of the late John and Helen Evich and was born in Norfolk, Va. on June 13, 1924, the oldest of five children. He studied at Quigley Seminary in Chicago and joined the Benedictine monks of Benet Lake abbey in Wisconsin where he made his first monastic vows on Jan. 15, 1948. He later studied at Conception Abbey in Missouri and was ordained a priest on May 26, 1951.

When Glastonbury Abbey was founded in 1954, Fr. Paul was one of the first monks sent to the new monastery. For many years he was Rector of the Latin School at the Abbey and taught Latin and Greek. He has also been Novice Master, rendered pastoral assistance at Resurrection Parish in Hingham and was chaplain to the sisters at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham for many years.

Fr. Paul was a talented musician, linguist and was devoted to the study of Sacred Scripture. He composed much of the music used for the Liturgy of the Hours at the Abbey. In 1998 he celebrated his fiftieth anniversary of monastic profession.

In addition to his brother monks at the Abbey, he leaves his sister, Kay Earnest of Norfolk, Va. and his brother, Philip Evich of Maryland; and many nephews and nieces. Calling hours are at the Abbey, Sunday, Aug. 1 from 2 to 4 and 7 to 9. Fr. Paul's funeral was celebrated at the Abbey.

Arrangements were by McNamara-Sparrel Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Abbey, 16 Hull St., Hingham,. 02043, or the charity of your choice.

Old and young interact at Sunrise Assisted Living

Sandcastles' kids make weekly visits

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Few events in the lives of senior citizens bring as much joy as does spending time with children.

Whether the kids serve as remembrances of days gone by with their own children or simply as an infusion of spirited youth, there is a unique joy on the faces of seniors during their interactions with children.

Similarly, children feel a bond with seniors unlike that with other adults. Seniors seem to have a patience with children that younger adults, with all of their daily stresses, have a difficult time matching.

To that end, Route 3A neighbors SandCastles Day Care Center and Sunrise Assisted Living have begun a program in which four and five year-old children and seniors visit once a week and bring joy into each other's lives.

"The seniors read stories to the children, we sing songs, we play interactive games. We even made straw hats for Cinco de Mayo. It's wonderful."
— Anne Sexton, Sandcastles' director

"We go to Sunrise every Wednesday for 45 minutes to an hour," said Anne Sexton, director and co-owner of SandCastles. "The seniors read stories to the children, we sing songs, we play interactive games. We even made straw hats for Cinco de Mayo. It's wonderful."

The children meet with the seniors at Sunrise's third-floor patio area, where the seniors sit on the perimeter around the children, who are definitely center-stage as they read interactive stories and play games.

"They're adorable, absolutely adorable," said Sunrise resident Ann Kabisaitis, who had the honor of reading and singing 'Mary Had a Little Lamb' with the children on their visit last Wednesday.

Kabisaitis said that the children were a wonderful reminder of her days as a grandmother of young children.

"My grandchildren grew up too fast," she laughed. "They're 18, 20, and 22 now and it's nice to remember how much fun the little ones are. I live on the 2nd floor, but I always come up here when the kids come."

Fellow Sunrise resident Dorothy Gentry said that she also looks forward to the visits from the children, who are reminders of a previous occupation.

"Oh, I love to see them," she said. "I ran my own nursery when my youngest one was little."

The weekly visits were the brainchild of Pamela Neeves, program coordinator at Sunrise, who initially called Sexton to invite the kids over for the Christmas holiday season.

"Pam called me and we went over for Christmas," Sexton said. "We made ornaments for the seniors and we sang holiday songs with them."

That initial encounter went so well that Sexton and Neeves decided to continue the visits on a permanent basis.

"They've been coming for six months now," Neeves said of the children from SandCastles. "In the winter, the residents helped them to put their boots and coats on."

Sexton said the unique qualities which seniors possess are invaluable to the children

"The seniors have the patience and willingness to listen to the kids. The kids tell them about their boo-boos and all their little anecdotes and the seniors really get a kick out of it."

Sexton said the children get a great deal of enjoyment from the experience as well.

"It's rewarding for the kids to be around older people," she said. "A lot of their grandparents aren't around."

Only about 10 children go to Sunrise each week, and Sexton said the children that don't get to go during a particular week are often upset.

"The kids call it 'Cinderella's Castle'," she said. "They're always asking me, "When are we going to Cinderella's Castle?" and they're disappointed when we aren't able to go."

Flu preparation plan on horizon

State health agency urges towns to think ahead

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

While the uncertainty of the future can be exciting, that same uncertainty can cause concern for those formulating the town's public policy.

What happens in case of a hurricane or if the proverbial "storm of the century" should render the roads unusable? How will the fire and police departments function in such cases?

Town officials formulate disaster relief plans for circumstances such as these so that they have a plan to follow should the unexpected occur.

To that end, health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik sent out a memo on July 29 to town department heads warning them that a worldwide outbreak of influenza, called a pandemic, is a possibility in the coming years.

Dr. Godzik also invited the town officials to watch a video produced by the Centers for Disease Control [CDC] and the Federal Emergency Management Association [FEMA] which helps towns to formulate a plan to react to a potential influenza pandemic.

"If an influenza pandemic does strike, however, there is very little time to react. It's a good idea to have a plan in place."
— Judy Fitzsimmons, public health nurse

"I urge all of you to attend as an influenza pandemic is looming on the horizon and we need to be prepared," he wrote.

Senior housing study set for fall

Professional analysis will clarify needs

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

While everyone seems to recognize that there is a lack of senior housing in Cohasset, it is a need that is difficult to prove without the numbers to back it up.

In asking the selectmen to support spending $5,000 for a professional survey to explore the senior housing need in town, Cohasset Elder Affairs housing committee chairman Barbara Anglin said the study is too important to be done by those who aren't professionals.

"The mission of our committee is to assess the housing needs of Cohasset seniors, but we don't feel like we're able to gather substantiated facts and figures ourselves," she told selectmen. "We have plenty of anecdotal evidence but we realized that our survey didn't meet the needs of Cohasset seniors."

Anglin said that she had met with Elaine Wilby from the McCormack Institute at UMass Boston and that Wilby had expressed interest in doing a senior housing study for the town.

"The study wouldn't be free," Anglin said. "The McCormack Institute did a similar study for three towns in the North Shore for $5,000. We're probably looking at something in that ballpark."

Selectman Fred Koed said he felt that such a price tag was well worth it considering the need for a senior housing study.

"I think $5,000 seems very reasonable," he said. "We all have people who tell us there's a senior housing need, but it's something that's hard to document."

"Without relevant data, we're nowhere."
— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

Fellow selectman Diane Sullivan questioned the need of a study to validate the fact that there's a lack of adequate senior housing in town.

"We can all give half a dozen stories of people who are having this problem," she said. "Our efforts should be in finding a place to put senior housing, not in documenting a need that we all know is there."

Selectman Roseanne McMorris said that documenting and quantifying the need is a necessary first step.

"The CEA housing committee has grappled with this issue time and time

Red Lion plans need town oversight

Building inspector worried about scope

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A wine bar, bistro, bakery, dining room and lounge and 15 luxury suites with Jacuzzis are all part and parcel of the new Red Lion Inn and Lilac House. Once completed, the two abutting structures — which are undergoing extensive renovations — will surely provide a badly needed draw to Cohasset Village.

But as construction continues, the plans, proffered by the owner Gerde Ordelheide, appear to be on the fast track. Although the inn — built in 1704 making it one of the oldest buildings around — will celebrate its tercentennial in five years, the wheels of modern government don't always move as quickly as one would like.

What is required is the often-tedious process of moving through the town boards to get their approvals.

The front setback of the addition to the Lilac House, which is to be turned into a bistro and bakery, has sent up a red flag, according to Cohasset Building Inspector Bob Egan.

Phone campaign for charity

Police Officer William Quigley, president of the Cohasset Police Association, said residents can expect phone calls soliciting tax-deductible donations for the non-profit organization. The telephone drive, being handled by All-Pro Productions, will be conducted for the next three weeks.

"The money will be used for scholarships for graduating seniors, to assist civic groups in town and other worthwhile causes," Quigley explained.

No calls will be made after dark, he said.

There will also be a baseball game at 1 p.m., Sept. 25 with the police association competing against former members of the New England Patriots at Beechwood Ball Park. There's no charge for admission.

"It's a family event," Quigley said.

Upcoming meetings are noted

Colburn steps down

Richard B. Colburn let Town Manager Mark Haddad know he is stepping down from the government structure committee due to health factors.

"I enjoyed serving on the committee and regret having to resign," he wrote in a recent letter. "I am proud of the small role I played in establishing the town manager form of government.

"You and the board of selectmen have done a fine job in implementing the organizational change."

Wants to serve on task force

Frances F. Andrews, 2 Black Horse Lane, wants to serve on the village revitalization task force.

"I have been asked to join the village revitalization task force," Andrews wrote to selectmen. "I attended the last meeting and found it to be exciting and challenging."

Andrews, an 11-year resident and licensed architect, was a member of the original group that formulated the village charette, a village design compiled with input from many citizens.

"I feel I can make a worthwhile contribution," Andrews said.

Resigned from design review board

Eileen M. Corbett has resigned from the design review board because she and her husband are moving to Dreamwold in Scituate.

She said it has been rewarding to serve on the board and would step down immediately to allow selectmen to seek a replacement.

Interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office at 383-4105 or stop by the office, which is on the second floor of town hall.

Special Town Meeting date set

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting that this fall's Special Town Meeting will be held on Nov.14.

Hand-painted furniture featured at art auction

Artists dabble in new medium to benefit center

By Lauryn Mittleman

Christina Ronder and Colly Geer paint a stool for the furniture auction to benefit programs at the South Shore Art Center.

How much would you pay for a one of a kind (and perhaps once in a career!) hand-painted furniture design by celebrated master painter Sergio Roffo? What about the first hand-painted piece of its kind from local artist Becky Haletky — known for her magnificent mural lighting up the children's room at the Paul Pratt Library?

What's your price to add a one-time-only from an esteemed artisan to your collection?

Bear in mind after you've figured on a number you'll have to battle it out with other interested buyers. These valuable commodities are rare and understandably desired, and might very well induce a war of highly competitive bidding. At least that's what South Shore Art Center special event coordinators are counting on.

Something unique and different is what the art center staff was seeking to take the spotlight at the up-coming gala auction celebration, and what more enticing a prospect than original, hand-painted designs to liven up the bidding? Functional yet artistic, painted furniture has been flying off showroom floors for some time now, and the trend doesn't appear to be waning anytime soon. So why waste time in the gift shops when instead you could add a true work of art to your interior design — one from an area artist considered to be among the cream of the crop.

While the new line is not finished just yet, the furniture designs will ultimately be arranged as the star attractions of the art center's end-of-summer, "Evening on the Harbor" auction event at 7 p.m., Sept. 25 at Atlantica restaurant. From there the pieces will go home with the highest bidders as part of the evening's both live and silent auctions.

When event co-chair Stephanie Middleton suggested art center faculty members and gallery artists try painting furniture for the good cause, every one of the two dozen volunteers propositioned stepped up to lend a creative hand. A total of 20 pieces of furniture, representing a variety of design styles, were then collected from local businesses, private citizens and art center members. Many acquired turned out to be antiques — seasoned but sound pieces fished from barns and attics. In need of a makeover, the pieces were then sent to the center to undergo their transformations.

Before long, what were once unfinished and arguably lackluster Victorian bookshelves, stools and side tables were prepped and primed to meet their beauticians. Spread about the room, the artists were able to select the piece which particularly intrigued them. Then it was up to the creator to envision the final product, for art center organizers offered no specific theme or subject matter. This allowed the creators to produce whatever moves them, true to their own unique flair.

While many volunteering artists carried their assignments home to complete, last Wednesday and Thursday was designated studio time at the art center. There, in truth, some volunteers did admit they have dabbled but a bit in the realm of art enhanced furnishings. However, most reported the medium was entirely new to them.

So with a deep breath, sitting down with their pallets side by side, the crew went to work.

"It's going to be interesting," expressed an artist to one another starting out.

"The end result will be beautiful things from great artists," assured Middleton, herself creating an original piece for the event.

Folk artist Jean Replogle, renowned for her elaborate scenes of Cohasset neighborhoods and those in other surrounding towns, chose a sideboard table as her first platform from which to dive into the waters of painted furniture. Similarly, long-time weaver Christina Ronder will make her debut on the painting scene with her new challenge.

"It's neat to see artists step away from their usual mediums," offers Middleton. "[The finished work] will be one of a kind, never before and maybe never again!"

A trained horticultural artist, Cohasset's own Sarah Roche chose an elegant antique table as her new project.

"I've only dabbled in painting furniture," explains Roche. "But it's fun to brighten my horizons and try different things."

And when the paint dries, what will the wooden canvas feature? Flowers, but of course.

Meanwhile, retired 30-year art teacher Don Larkin of Scituate has suitably chosen to apply his talent to one of three antique children's chair and desk sets. On the other hand, art center gallery artist Ros Farbush will branch out from her usual realm by being forced to confine her brush strokes to a somewhat restrictive table top.

"I think it's a wonderful juxtaposition," says Monica McKenney, who is director of development at the art center. "The table is simple, and her art is wild and free."

And while their artistic activities of the moment may find them too far from Cohasset to join in at the Ripley Road workshop, many other re-finishers will contribute from afar. Professional furniture painter and long-time art center friend Dorothy Palmer has had her desk sent off to Nantucket for its new look, with a promise it will arrive safely back on the mainland looking pretty in time for its big night.

Finished and again grouped together, the signed originals will run the gamut of decorative styles. With stools adorned with hearts and seashells, oversized salad bowls featuring mermaids, nautical themes and the oh-so popular checkered and geometric patterns, the artists promise there will be something for everyone. From kitchens to children's bedrooms, each item is promised to be the perfect showpiece to make a room pop.

Ultimately, when the final "fair warning" is called from the auction block, "Evening on the Harbor's" moneys raised will support the art center's "Arts to Go" and "Looking at Art" educational initiatives. Begun roughly a decade ago, "Arts to Go" augments the curriculums of elementary and secondary schools by sending visiting artists and scholars out into classrooms. Conversely, "Looking at Art" brings students to the art center for docent-led tours of gallery exhibitions, additionally providing the opportunity for hands-on creative projects at the guidance of studio faculty.

While originally both programs extended primarily to school systems on the South Shore, (to date about 20 towns have been involved,) now the art center's staff explains they would like to see the offerings extend further.

"We would like to bring in more groups from outside of the area," explains McKenney. "Particularly to towns which can't afford to bus students here."

"In the current funding climate for public education these programs cannot possibly pay for themselves," adds art center executive director Dillon Bustin. "The art center's commitments to 'Arts to Go' and 'Looking at Art' are part of a larger commitment to provide high-quality, stimulating arts experiences for all, despite the necessary costs."

While initially underwriting for the programs were provided by grants from the Harold Brooks Foundation and the Massachusetts Cultural Council respectively, now the center seeks help from the community at large. "An Evening on the Harbor" serves as the art center's big fall fund-raiser, and organizers explain goals are high, for the contributed income is much needed.

So back at the art center's studio last week the consensus from the artists on hand was that exploring new creative territory really wasn't nearly as intimidating as expected.

There's been some wonderful ideas so far," offered Middleton on Thursday. "And a lot of energy and excitement."

So much so, in fact, some present admitted they enjoyed the project so much that in the end the finished products could prove painful to part with. But at the same time the artists realize it is all for a good cause, and that each of their "offspring" will go to good homes. What's more, a few artists began realizing they themselves could, theoretically, bid for their own design!

Functional yet artistic, painted furniture has been flying off showroom floors for some time now, and the trend doesn't appear to be waning anytime soon. So why waste time in the gift shops when instead you could add a true work of art to your interior design — one from an area artist considered to be among the cream of the crop.

Art center auction has something for everyone

In addition to hand-painted furniture, excitement is also already brewing for some of the other items in the night's auction catalog including season passes to polo matches, fishing excursions, restaurant gift certificates and homestays. Creative supporters have also volunteered photo shoots, memberships to area art museums, and cooking classes led by artists of the culinary kind.

Event co-chairmen Stephanie Middleton, Sarah Davis and Andrea Kinnealey, say they are still actively soliciting contributions for the cause. And as a reminder, items donated need not necessarily be extravagant.

"We're always looking for unused airline tickets and so on," explains Middleton, "anything at all like a bottle of wine to put into a theme basket."

But if would-be supporters insist on extravagance, that's OK too. At the moment co-chairs are frantically searching for a donation from jeweler (or anyone) of a pair of diamond earrings. At "An Evening on the Harbor," each raffle ticket will come with a set of cubic zirconia studs affixed. However, at the evening's end one lucky party-goer will walk away with the real McCoy.

And in a final point of interest, one of the night's most suspenseful moments might come when master painter Sergio Roffo's limited edition is brought up on the auction block. His anticipated contribution for the cause—a Hitchcock chair pulled straight from the dining room table of art center secretary Eleanor Bleakie. Bleakie explains she did her part donating one seat from her set for the artist's divergence from his norm, but now she'll have to risk bidding with the crowd to get it back.

To reserve tickets for "An Evening on the Harbor" in advance contact the South Shore Art Center at 383-ARTS (2787). To donate goods or services, or to advertise in the night's auction booklet, contact Stephanie Middleton at 740-2938.

Maritime studies course makes a big splash

Summer class an instant hit with students

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The final bell of the school year signifies freedom for high school students everywhere and a beginning to a summer filled with everything but school work.

For a group of Cohasset High School students, however, summer offered an opportunity to take a science class unlike any other they had taken during their high school years.

The three-week course is entitled "An Introduction to Maritime Studies," and is an on-the-water, interdisciplinary class which allows students to gain a science class credit during the summer while learning in a hands-on manner not possible in the classroom.

"It seemed more like a summer camp kind of thing than a regular class," said CHS student Shane Dewar. "There weren't the homework pressures like there are in school usually. I thought the class was a great idea because it was really educational but fun too."

Fellow CHS student Allison Scott said the mix of scientific study and rowing kept the class interesting.

"The class was half studying and half rowing," she said. "If you're in a classroom all day, you can get bored and lose attention very easily. In this class, we rowed and then we would do some water testing and then go back to the classroom."

CHS science teacher Jack Buckley, one of the driving forces behind instituting the course, said that it allowed students to tap into the wealth of maritime resources which Cohasset offers.

"The class is a mixture of classroom learning with an outward-bound type of experience," he said. "The kids are able to learn the basics of navigation, rowing skills, nautical studies, oceanography, and marine biology. There's a wide spectrum of topics for the kids to study."

One of those topics was drown proofing, which was a swimming test designed to teach kids to stay afloat in the water. As luck would have it, the students were treated to one of the coldest summer days in recent memory for their test.

"It was a bad, bad day to do it," Allison laughed. "The water was so cold. It was like swimming in Arctic water."

"The class is a mixture of classroom learning with an outward-bound type of experience The kids are able to learn the basics of navigation, rowing skills, nautical studies, oceanography, and marine biology.
— Jack Buckley, teacher

The course was funded through a number of sources, including the Cohasset Educational Foundation, Cohasset Maritime Institute, the Lobster Lab, and the Hull Lifesaving Museum.

Mr. and Mrs. Bourke Corcoran of King St. also made a generous donation to the program, helping to keep the tuition fee for each student down to $75.

"Mr. and Mrs. Corcoran saw the school committee meeting on television when we presented our idea for the maritime studies course," Buckley said. "In light of the failed budget override, the program could not fit in under the budget, and the Corcorans stepped in to help."

Buckley was pleased by the ability of a variety of people and organizations to come together to make the maritime studies program a reality.

"It was great that all the groups were able to work cooperatively," he said, noting that the CEF was particularly instrumental in providing funds for the program.

As a teacher, Buckley said he found it refreshing that he and the other instructors did not have to berate the students into performing their daily tasks.

"There was no grumbling about asking the kids to do the work," he said. "The kids were very willing to listen and were motivated to learn. I think the kids found what they were doing was very interesting."

Shane echoed his teacher's comments, saying that he learned a great deal about a number of topics.

"We learned about zoo plankton, marine life, and we also studied the condition of the ocean," he said. "I liked all of it."

One of the things that the students enjoyed the most was an overnight camping trip to Lovell's Island in Boston.

"There were two crews for the trip to Lovell's Island," Allison said. "My crew rowed there and it took us 5 1/2 hours. The other crew rowed back the next day and we took the water shuttle back to Hingham."

Shane said the camping trip was a great way to end the course.

"My favorite things about the class were crewing and camping, so I loved the trip," he said. "I just wish the camping trip could have been longer."

Both Shane and Allison said that the summer maritime class should continue in the future, a feeling which Buckley said was shared by all of the students who participated in the course.

"The kids unanimously endorsed the class and feel it should continue and I know I'd like to see a whole slew of maritime courses," Buckley said. "The hard part is always trying to come up with the funds."

To that end, Cohasset High School is applying for a grant from UMass Boston that would help the school's science teachers research how to establish and fund a maritime studies program.

"We have such a great combination of weather, resources, and environment in the summer in Cohasset," Buckley said. "I think it's important that we take advantage of it."

Emma Gardner holds a plankton net. Part of the class involves studying marine biology.

Pump-out boat helps keep Cohasset Harbor clean

Boat owners must not waste the opportunity

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

After a fun-filled weekend spent aboard the family boat, disposing of waste is probably one of the last subjects occupying anybody's mind.

However, high levels of water contamination have been measured near the yacht club and are a cause of concern to Cohasset Board of Health officials, who know that some people swim in that water despite the 'No Swimming' signs posted there.

"We've had a couple of high counts of fecal coliform at the yacht club this year," said Dr. Joseph Godzik, the town's health agent. "We don't know what to attribute it to."

Fecal coliform are bacteria found in the intestines of large mammals. Without further testing, there is no way to determine whether the high levels of fecal coliform are due to human or animal waste.

To ensure that waste from their boats does not enter the harbor, boat owners can utilize the town's free pump-out boat. The pump-out boat collects waste from town boats and deposits it in the town sewer system.

"Most of the pumping is done on the weekends, and it's very informal," said assistant harbormaster Bob Baggs. "We have a log book and all anyone has to do to use the boat is put in a request.."

The pump-out boat provides a free service to local boaters.

The boat, named 'Stinky' by someone with a very dry wit, is docked in front of the harbormaster's office at Government Island.

"The name is just a joke," Baggs laughed. "The boat actually never has an odor. It's very sanitary and very well thought out. We drive the boat past the second town dock and we open a manhole and pump the waste into the town sewer system."

Baggs said that the harbormaster and assistant harbormasters have had to empty a couple of 300-gallon tanks into the town sewer system this summer. That amount of use indicates that people in town are becoming aware of and using the service, as opposed to last year, when the boat saw little action.

"There was very minimal usage last year," Godzik said. "We don't have exact numbers because the harbormaster is not required to give a report."

The pump-out boat is a 27-foot alcar, which is paid for by a state grant that comes via a tax on fishing equipment and tackle.

"The boat is made down on the Cape, where these boats are made for all of the towns around here," Baggs said.

Water testing is being done throughout the summer at Little Harbor by Cohasset High School students, in conjunction with the Lobster Lab and Camp Dresser McKee, the engineering firm contracted by the town to study the overall health of Little Harbor.

Town beaches are also tested weekly for contamination, and have had levels well below the safe swimming limit every time.

As far as the high levels of fecal coliform that have been measured at the yacht club, Godzik said that board of health members do not feel they present a pressing danger to the town's public safety.

"We would have to do much more extensive research to define if the organisms were of human origin," Godzik said. "We're not too concerned because the yacht club is not a public bathing area. Sandy Beach would be a different issue, but we haven't had any high counts there."

Baggs said the dumping of waste by boats is almost nonexistent these days because of harsh penalties and the availability of pump-out boats like the one in Cohasset.

"Dumping is 100 percent illegal and there are stiff fines," he said. "Later-model boats are all equipped with holding tanks because you can't have a toilet on a boat these days without a holding tank. Plus, why would anyone dump when there's a free boat right here to take care of it."

The pump-out boat is open to anyone using the harbor and those wishing to use the service can call the harbormaster's office at 383-0863.

Owner won't give up quest for liquor license

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The owner of the Mobil gas station at Sohier Street and Route 3A has been denied twice in his quest to get a liquor license, but insists that he will keep appealing.

Though his application has been rejected by both the Board of Selectmen and the state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission [ABCC], owner Paul Vercollone has appealed the decision of the ABBC to Suffolk Superior Court.

"If we don't get the liquor license, we don't get it, but I'm going to keep trying," he said.

His initial attempt to acquire a liquor license was unanimously rejected by selectmen in June 1998, who said there was no need for another store in the area to sell beer and wine.

"You run an immaculate business that is a credit to the town," Selectman Diane Sullivan told Vercollone at the time. "My concern is that we don't need an additional establishment to sell beer and wine."

Then-selectman Nan Roth said that Mobil would be offering a redundant service because there are two package stores in the area, but Vercollone said such reasoning is erroneous.

"We're not looking to compete with liquor stores," he said. "If you're having a party and you're going to get a bunch of beer or wine, you wouldn't come to my store to get it," he said. "We want to be able to serve someone who is just looking for a six-pack of beer or a bottle of wine, as a convenience."

Vercollone said that convenience stores don't compete with businesses simply because they have a product in common.

"If you're going out for ice cream, you're not going to come to our store, even though we do sell ice cream," he said. "In the same way, people who are planning to go to the liquor store aren't going to come to my store instead."

Despite the opposition he has encountered in getting a liquor license, Vercollone said he has continued to appeal because he feels that he needs it to compete with other convenience stores.

"Selling beer and wine has become a real trend in our industry," he said. "We have to exhaust all possible avenues to keep up with the competition."

Assistant Attorney General Christopher Quaye, who is representing the ABCC in Superior court, wrote in a brief that issuing a liquor license to Mobil is not in the public interest.

"Mobil's neighborhood has enough liquor stores," Quaye wrote. "The Board of Selectmen based its decision on substantial evidence in the record.

Vercollone said that as gas stations have become convenience stores as well, he has simply tried to stay ahead of the curve.

"Gas stations used to only sell gas and fix cars," he said. "Then they started selling coffee and gum and selling beer and wine is just another logical step."

Richard Henderson, Vercollone's attorney, said that the Superior Court hearing on the motion appealing the ABCC ruling will take place in the middle of September.

GREAT NEWS!

David and Katherine Gray have great news to report about their two daughters — their older daughter Kendra, CHS class of '95 and Union College class of '99, has been accepted to train as a volunteer in the Peace Corps. After completing her three-months training program, she will spend two years teaching English as a foreign language in a secondary school in a yet-to-be-named city in western Russia She leaves for Moscow Aug. 28. Kendra has spent this summer volunteering with the Red Cross in Boston, teaching English as a second language.

The Grays' younger daughter, Karyn, CHS class of '99, has been accepted in the Faculty of Arts and Sciences at McGill University in Montreal, Quebec. She leaves for Montreal Aug. 22 — the day before her 18th birthday!

Happy Birthday, Karyn, hope to hear more from you and all of your adventures!

Naturally, Kendra, we want to hear from you, also! What a great experience for both of you — remember, share it all with us!

A SPECIAL LADY

Many of you will remember Sue (Williams) Eldridge, she was a member of the class of CHS, 1962. She resides on the Cape, and cares for children who are mentally impaired. She looks wonderful, and truly does a wonderful job with her "charges" — she is a special lady, indeed! She is often spotted at the Melody Tent in Hyannis, be sure to look her up any Wednesday you are there! She absolutely loves to see fellow Cohassetites!

NEW ARRIVAL!

We must give a huge Cohasset welcome to Kathleen Meghan McKeon, daughter of Claudia and James McKeon. Kathleen was born March 29; she weighed 6 pounds, 12 ounces and was 19 inches long.

Housing for seniors

Cohasset is one of those places that other people talk about. The "Gold Coast" with its often-spectacular seaside houses along Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue is as well-known beyond our borders as it is right here.

That's why a story — like the one in the Cohasset Mariner last month — about median house prices at $400,000 and an expected 14 or more million-dollar home sales in town this year alone grabs the eye.

There are times when we all join in the celebrity of being from Cohasset, a place that has attracted the rich and famous over the years — including providing the centerpiece for two Hollywood feature films.

But those that know the town well realize that is only a small part of the story.

Cohasset, a small town by any standard with its population of 7,000, has its measure of diversity. Whether it's the lobstermen, townies or vast middle class — the town embraces them all.

That's why it is so important that the town continues to seek a way to provide affordable housing for its senior citizens. Many seniors were born here and either cannot afford to maintain their homes or don't want to any longer.

There's nothing in town that serves the aging empty nester who has reached retirement age and may not want to mow the law and repair the family home any longer.

These folks are not ready for assisted living and may have too many assets to qualify for subsidized housing.

As Barbara Anglin of the Council on Elder Affairs points out, "what happens is that people have a valuable asset in their homes, but they might struggle to live.

"You can sell your house, but then where are you going to go? There's nothing accessible in Cohasset for people who are house-rich and cash-poor."

The CEA housing committee is exploring options and to that end, will host a housing forum on Sept. 14. Stay tuned to the Mariner for further details closer to the date. Also this week, selectmen backed spending $5,000 for a professional study to explore the need for senior housing in town.

We think senior housing and the library would be a nice mix at the old Osgood School and hope that option is seriously explored. A by-law, like the one Scituate has, allowing an apartment to be created within a home is another option that could be examined and tailored to Cohasset.

Cohasset has a lot of very bright people that care about the town. Surely, if enough citizens put their heads together, they can make affordably-priced housing for the town's precious senior population a reality.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Lobster Lab progress noted

DEAR MR. HADDAD:

We are in receipt of your letter dated July 19 and, quite frankly, find it quite perplexing and disturbing. The provisions of our lease provide for annual reporting to the Town of our progress by Feb. 1 of each year, at which time the Town may make a determination as to whether or not we have ".. .demonstrated sustained, substantive progress towards the achievement of [such] projected fundraising, construction and program goals ..." The Lab delivered our first such annual report which indicated that we were ahead of projections on both fundraising and program goals, and slightly behind on construction. Such annual review was negotiated specifically to avoid the requirement and burden of more frequent review. Your letter indicates that the Selectmen recently viewed the property and have "... determined that substantive progress has not been made...." We beg to differ most emphatically.

We are in the process of building a new institution here in Cohasset, not just renovating a building. While we have not yet begun work on the structure, we are well advanced in building programs and funding commitments for the project which continue to put us ahead of projections. It is rather ironic that today's issue (July 29) of the Mariner carries two headlines on its front page: "Lobster Lab Told to Shape Up or Ship Out," and "Students Monitor Health of Little Harbor." Student participation in the Little Harbor Study and the summer Maritime Studies Program were both made possible by funding and coordination from the Lab.

As to the specific requests made in your letter, we find neither to be appropriate or acceptable. The lease specifically provides only for lease of the building. We are therefore quite surprised to have you request that we maintain the "surrounding grounds." If the Town wishes to modify the lease so as to grant us use of a portion of the Hagerty property beyond the footprint of the building, we would be happy to entertain such a proposal. Otherwise we believe that responsibility for maintenance of the site rests with the Town. As to painting the existing building, we consider that to be a gross waste of precious resources, in that most of the exterior of the building will be replaced during renovation. The building looked just as bad for all the years the Town owned it before signing the lease, and we do not see the urgency in painting it before Sept. 1.

Finally, before the Town initiates any attempts to cancel the lease, it should ask how well it has served the desires of the taxpayers in the development of the rest of the Hagerty property. "He who lives in glass houses should not throw stones." As we have pointed out in the past, if there was some other compelling use for the building waiting in the wings (other than turning it into seasonal parking spaces), we could better understand the urgency to advance the construction phase of the project. It took four years for the Lightkeepers to raise $400,000 and complete their building project. Town Meeting has now voted multiple times to allow us the chance to do the same with the Lab, and we would respectfully request your patience and support. If your Board is truly interested in assisting us with the establishment of the Lab, I would invite you to attend our meetings. The next scheduled date is Wednesday, Aug. 18, at 7:30 p.m. in the conference room at Pavonis, Inc., 155 King Street.

No new runway for Logan Airport

By Sen. Robert Hedlund
SPECIAL TO MARINER

Once again it appears that the citizens of Hingham and the surrounding communities are expected to shoulder the burden of the airport demands for much of New England. While the need for inexpensive and reliable flights is crucial for business in the region, expansion of Logan is the wrong way to fill that need. The suggestion that the only way to ensure Massachusetts remains competitive is to more than double the flights over sections of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset is poorly thought out and unfairly biased against our community.

Despite MASSPort's frequent attempts to dance around the facts, the construction of so-called Runway 14/32 will only make things worse. The new runway would more than double the numbers of aircraft flying over our heads in the next ten years. Presently, there are about 32,000 over-flights of our area every year. According to MASSPort's statistics, the projected use of Logan without the new runway should result in a slight decline in air traffic over the South Shore. However, should the new runway be built, in ten years we will see, hear and smell 51,500 more planes annually.

The Draft Environmental Impact Statement/Report (DEIS/R) on the Logan Airsides Improvement Project, as MASSPort refers to their planned expansion, overlooks many important facts. It fails to measure the amount of noise and pollution we on the South Shore already face. Furthermore, it only uses data from 1993, ignoring the growth in traffic over the last six years. The DEIS/R is the first step in gaining approval for the expansion of Logan airport. There is still a federal court injunction that prohibits any growth and supercedes any legislative action taken by the commonwealth.

Before any action is taken at Logan, MASSPort must demonstrate it has fully studied how all the airports in the region can be integrated to address the transportation needs of the next millenium.

In spite of MASSPort's poor recommendations, there is no disagreeing with the necessity to improve air travel in Massachusetts. Delayed flights not only frustrate travelers but cost area businesses money. Furthermore, the new convention center is a key link to Boston's continued growth; failure to address the flight delays will make it less competitive nationally. However, a new runway is not necessarily the best way to reduce congestion and relieve the weather-related delays at Logan.

The greatest shortcoming of the MASSPort study is its failure to adequately address the possibility of expanding the use of the other airports in the region. Because the report bases its assumptions on old data, it ignores the fact that Manchester grew by 80 percent last year alone. Manchester Airport and T.F. Green outside Providence are the two fastest growing regional airports in the country. Over the next ten years, we are going to see more and more individuals and businesses taking advantage of these facilities, offsetting the burden on Logan. In addition to which, businesses are focusing their growth outside of Boston and will not necessarily see Logan as their most convenient option.

Recently, I toured the airport in Worcester; it is a great new facility with all the potential of Providence and Manchester. Unfortunately, the city of Worcester does not have the resources to bring in more carriers and meet its potential. For that reason, I am working with the Joint Committee on Transportation to transfer control of the airport to MASSPort and improve the highway infrastructure so that Worcester can become part of the regional transportation strategy.

Before any action is taken at Logan, MASSPort must demonstrate it has fully studied how all the airports in the region can be integrated to address the transportation needs of the next millenium. To ensure this, I am coordinating a bipartisan effort to work with the administration and MASSPort to create a commission to study and design a regional transportation strategy. The development of Runway 14/32 will be contingent on the findings of that commission. Should the administration balk at our efforts, I will work with my colleagues in the Senate and the House to pass legislation to ensure their compliance.

The proposed construction of Runway 14/32 in unfair to the people on the South Shore. Logan is already too big, too loud and too close. MASSPort needs to properly consider the advantages of shifting the growth in demand to the other airports in the region. Providence and Manchester have proved themselves to be ready to play a major role in the air transportation system. Worcester and Hanscom have great potential as well. There is no reason why these facilities—and the communities that surround them—cannot play a role meeting New England's demand for air travel in the next millenium.

Lt. Governor Swift honored at cookout

Lt. Governor Jane Swift and State GOP Chairman Brian Cresta will be honored at the annual Cohasset cookout to be held Sunday, Aug. 29 from 4:30 to 7 p.m. at the seaside home of Ted and Julie Guild.

A native of North Adams, Swift became the youngest woman ever elected to the Massachusetts Senate and rose to the rank of assistant minority leader, again the youngest woman in senate history to serve in either party's leadership. In 1996 Swift ran in the 1st Congressional District and finished closer than any other GOP congressional candidate in the state. Governor Weld appointed her director of Regional Airport Development of Massachusetts Port Authority, and in December 1977 she served as director of state office of Consumer Affairs and Business Regulation. Swift and Governor Cellucci were elected in November 1998.

State party chair and representative of Wakefield, Middleton and Precincts 1, 3 and 4 of Lynnfield first was elected in 1994, re-elected in 1996; and in 1998 by 77 percent, Cresta also was elected selectman of Wakefield at the age of 21 in 1991. The youngest selectman ever elected in the history of Wakefield, Cresta serves as a member of Joint Committee on Housing and Urban Development, Insurance, ranking minority member on Transportation and Science and Technology and in 1999 was named a member of powerful House Ways and Means Committee.

Other special guests are Senator and Weymouth Mayoral Candidate Bob Hedlund, GOP House Leader Fran Marini of Hansen, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset, Sheriff Peter Forman of Plymouth, D.A. Mike Sullivan of Abington, Rep. Vinny Demacedo of Plymouth and County Commissioner Robert Stone of Whitman.

Open to the public, especially residents of Norfolk, Plymouth, Barnstable, Bristol Counties but reservations are required. RSVP 781-383-0031.

What's new in the children's room

A Teddy Bear Story Hour will be held for young children and their families Thursday, Aug. 26, at 7 p.m.

All children are invited to wear P.J.'s and to bring your favorite stuffed animal. It's sure to be a fun-filled evening for children and parents. See you there!

The Summer Reading Program continues until the annual party Thursday, Aug. 19, at 1 p.m. All those who have participated, will be given their reading certificates at this time and enjoy a "Make You Own Sundae Party." There will be 24 alien "Beanie" babies awarded to the first 24 children whose names are drawn. The winner of the "Candy Jar" contest will also be announced on that day.

All who participated in the reading program this summer are invited to attend.

Website and Internet help

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is seeking an individual willing to donate time giving an informal three-session course or just a quick "one-time "session teaching basic Internet techniques. The training would help all those interested in using the three media workstations currently in use at the library.

Janet Husband, library director, is also looking for someone to donate time to create a website page for the library. The website would provide information about all the programs offered at the library and progress about the new library construction.

If you are interested in community service at a low-key level and can give computer expertise to the library for either of the above positions, call Janet Husband, library director, at 383-1348.

Making some hard choices

TO THE EDITOR:

Your August 5 Cohasset Mariner article hit the nail on the head about the need for additional middle class senior housing in Cohasset. This, as your article pointed out was just what the Selectmen were recommending at the Fall Town Meeting, when a developer's proposal for just such a capability was turned down in favor of spending money to study of moving the library to Osgood School. It seemed to me at the time that a well organized focus group determined to upgrade the library ran over the carefully considered Osgood housing use. In fact, I remember the argument that Cohasset "didn't need additional senior housing".

My guess is that the library move to Osgood is not a done deal. For starters, there is the question as to whether a town of 7000 needs a new big full service library, when Hingham is so close with exactly that. Secondly, with the override vote this Spring, it is clear that the voters are getting stretched pretty thin. How many new desirable projects can we afford? This may be brought to a head when by the need for additional sewer systems, which could cause a huge cost increase to the Cohasset taxpayer. At some point, taxpayers are going to need to make some hard choices.

Cardboard! [= $!]

Ah, cardboard! The very name bespeaks glamor [glamour!], drama, and fortune! Especially the latter, fortune. We live in a packaged society, like it or not. We are surrounded by STUFF. Stuff that is, or was, packaged.. So many of our movements are predicated upon packaging. Containers are big today, in more ways than one. And they're also small; everything has its container. Think about the trees involved — the energy — the logistics — the expense. Wow.

So all of us have packaging to dispose of. And since COMMON SENSE as well as SOUND FISCAL MANAGEMENT say to recycle all this, our town of Cohasset needs our packaging.

Cardboard has consistently been Cohasset's biggest moneymaker. This past month we received $35/ton for our cardboard. And this week's newsletter is being devoted solely to cardboard because of its importance, so we urge all Cohasset townspeople PLEASE — RECYCLE ALL FORMS OF CARDBOARD!

Cardboard we don't recycle becomes a deficit in that we have to pay to have the big trash dumpster hauled off — and the stuff clogs the planet somewhere.

Our story detours for a moment to the days when only corrugated cardboard was accepted for recycling, and its cousins the cereal boxes etc. and brown paper bags were thrown away, trashed. NO MORE! Now it's all together! All forms of cardboard [except for those waxed OJ, milk, and juice cartons, which, oddly enough, go flattened, please, into the JUNK MAIL bin] and brown paper bags go together into the cardboard bin. If you want some excitement, watch Dickie Poland bale up all of our cardboard offerings. It's an interesting process which he handles many times a day. It helps if the boxes are flattened. Please remove the waxed liners from any boxes and NO styrofoam, please. NO foam peanuts. Unfortunately styrofoam is not presently recycled. Some shopping agencies will re-use those foam peanuts, however, and plastic bubble-wrap — ask them.

So we need all the town's cardboard, from big cartons to the little cores from tissue paper rolls and everything in between. INCLUDING BROWN PAPER BAGS PLEASE! Please — no brown paper bags in the junk mail or in with the newspapers! No cardboard boxes etc. in the junk mail. EMPTY the bags, yes, but then put the bags in the cardboard bin. Plastic bags, of course, go into the marked barrels. Great. We appreciate your cooperation.

It's a packaged age. Even in China, many farmers are now leaving the countryside and moving to the cities, where they can double or triple their former income by recycling items like cardboard. Dramatic! Survival! Thanks. We're in this together. See you next time.

President Calvin Coolidge attends a 1925 recital carillon recital on Cohasset Common. A reenactment of his visit will take place at 5 p.m., Sunday Aug. 29. Shown are Father Wilson of St. Stephen's Church (holding a program), Clarence Barron (with captain's cap) who hosted the president, John Coolidge (the president's son) and President Coolidge (standing with hands clasped).

Calvin Coolidge visit slated

Cohasset Carillon celebrates 75 years

Actor Jim Cooke will portray President Calvin Coolidge at the 75th Anniversary of the 57-bell Cohasset Carillon at St. Stephen's Church on Cohasset Common.

At 6 p.m., Saturday, Aug. 28, carillonneur Sally Slade Warner and assistant Mary Kennedy will give a recital of music from the 1920s. The year of the carillon's dedication was 1924 and the hit song was "I'll See You in My Dreams." Calvin Coolidge was elected president under the popular slogan, "Coolidge without chaos." The first set of 23 bells, cast at Gillett & Johnston in Croydon, England, was installed in the Gothic church tower in June. Carillonneur Kamiel Lefevere of Belgium played two dedication recitals Sept. 23, 1924. The New York Times ran a full-page photo of the church tower and carillon in reporting this event. Less than a year after the carillon's dedication, the president of the United States, Calvin Coolidge, came to Cohasset to listen to the music of the bells.

Sunday, Aug. 29, Actor Jim Cooke, portraying President Calvin Coolidge, will re-enact his August 1925 visit to Cohasset. Arriving by antique car at 5 p.m., Cooke will give a half hour address by the president marked with reminiscences and humor. A clambake for 100 will be held at 4:30 p.m. Tickets (donation $20) may be purchased at the Sunday recitals or from St. Stephen's Church office, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset.

The carillon recital will be given at 6 p.m. by Milford Myhre from the Bok Singing Tower of Lake Wales, Fla. All are invited to come. Admission to the presidential address and carillon recital are free. You may wish to bring a blanket and lawn chair to the town common to sit in a beautiful setting and hear the music of the 57-bell Cohasset Carillon. For more information, call (781) 383-1083.

State health agency urges towns to think ahead

mons said that we might not see an influenza pandemic for decades, but that preparation is essential because of the speed with which an outbreak can occur.

"Nobody knows when the next influenza pandemic might come," she said. "It could be in the next 10 years or it might be 30 years. If an influenza pandemic does strike, however, there is very little time to react. It's a good idea to have a plan in place."

One reason for the attention being paid to a potential influenza pandemic is the fact that one has not occurred since the 1960s.

"Historically, there's been an influenza pandemic every 10 to 30 years," said Donna Lazorik of the Massachusetts Immunization Program. "Many experts believe another pandemic is inevitable."

Controlling influenza is a difficult task because new strains of the virus appear, meaning that the vaccine also has to be changed every year.

"There can be drastic changes in the influenza virus, Fitzsimmons said. "A new influenza vaccine has to be manufactured every year. Because of new strains, an influenza pandemic could have a devastating effect."

Lazorik said the state is developing a plan to assist cities and towns should a pandemic occur.

"When a vaccine becomes available for a new strain, we want to have a plan in place to get it out to the cities and towns," she said.

The World Health Organization and the CDC have a worldwide network of tracking and surveillance of the influenza virus, which Fitzsimmons said is necessary because of how connected the world has become.

"The virus could spread much more quickly now than in the past with the amount of air travel between different parts of the world," she said.

An illustration of how travel can cause powerful new viruses to spread quickly occurred in the aftermath of WWI, when American soldiers unknowingly brought home a new strain of influenza.

"One of the worst influenza pandemics in the United States occurred in 1918, when soldiers coming back from WWI brought the virus back from Europe," Fitzsimmons said. "Some people called it the Spanish Flu, but then the Spanish called if the French Flu. Nobody knew exactly where it started, but it was devastating."

The worldwide network designed to prevent a potential influenza pandemic did just that in 1998 when a new strain in the Far East was successfully contained.

"The last time a potential pandemic occurred was last year in Hong Kong," Lazorik said. "People were getting a new strain of influenza from chickens, and the new strain had a high fatality rate. Luckily, that strain didn't have the ability to be transferred from person to person."

Because flu seasons differ throughout the world, the CDC has to be constantly aware of new strains of influenza.

"Influenza is continuously circulating around the world," Lazorik said. "For instance, the flu season in the U.S. is from October to March, but in tropical areas the flu season is pretty much year round."

Fitzsimmons said that formulating a plan would put Cohasset in good stead should an influenza pandemic hit the town.

"Most towns have natural disaster plans," she said. "What we need to do is adapt that plan to an influenza pandemic. How will we set up clinics and immunization, and what will we do if half the police force gets sick? Those are the things we have to think about."

Immunizing senior citizens is also a paramount concern of public health officials in cases of influenza outbreaks, due to the fact that influenza often leads to pneumonia.

"Historically, the public health nurse [Fitzsimmons] has always taken the time to explain to the seniors why immunization for the flu is so important," said Kathy Bryanton, director of Cohasset Elder Affairs [CEA].

Bryanton said that CEA will hold a Wellness Day on the second Saturday in September, at which the importance of getting flu shots will be discussed.

Fitzsimmons said she hopes the attention being given to influenza by the state and the federal government encourages seniors and others to get immunized.

"Hopefully, people will get their flu shots as a result," she said.

Senior housing study set for fall

again," she said. "Without relevant data, we're nowhere."

Koed agreed that a study needs to be done before building takes place.

"We have to know what to build," he said.

Sullivan reiterated her feeling that looking for a place to put a development should be the preeminent focus of those concerned with senior housing.

"It seems to me that we should be looking for where to put it and invite in private developers," she said. "We don't need low-income, which we have with the condominiums on Elm Street. It seems to me that the need is market, and the next step is to find a solution."

Anglin agreed that finding a solution is the goal of everyone involved, but said that a professional study will be invaluable in determining what such a project will entail.

"We're going to need a creative, multifaceted solution," she said. "But before the solution, we have to know exactly what we need."

Because the UMass Boston study will be conducted prior to the Special Town Meeting on Nov. 14, Town manager Mark Haddad said it would have to be funded by a reserve fund transfer from the advisory committee.

While the results of the study will undoubtedly shed some light upon the subject of senior housing in Cohasset, the lack of available space for such a development will remain a formidable challenge.

"Look around you," said McMorris. "The reason this hasn't moved forward is that the land just isn't here."

Anglin agreed that the lack of available space is a significant hurdle, but cautioned that Cohasset is "way behind" other towns in documenting the need for senior housing and exploring possible solutions to the problem.

"Look at Scituate, with their bylaw that allows seniors to create an apartment within their homes, so someone else can assume maintenance of the home," agreed Selectman Merle Brown. "We've done nothing."

who also serves as the town's zoning officer.

The allowed setback in the downtown business district is 15 feet with exceptions being made when the buildings on either side are closer than that.

"It appears that the designer tried to take advantage of that exception using the remaining part of the Lilac House to compute the setback," Egan said in a letter to Gerde Ordelheide, the owner. Egan explained that not the Lilac House but the house next door probably should have been used to figure the setback.

"The addition is showing a closer setback than the part they tore down," Egan told the Mariner on Monday. "I know the owner has other plans and there may be issues that need to be resolved with other boards and commissions."

Egan explained that while a bakery and bistro are both allowed in a business district, a function area — which Ordelheide is planning for the second floor of the Lilac House — may not be.

"The second floor is labeled as a function area," Egan wrote to Ordelheide. "That term is not used in the by-law and needs more definition and explanation before I or the zoning board of appeals can determine if zoning relief is required."

Egan said he would feel more comfortable if he had a single contact such as a clerk-of-the-works handling the project.

Ordelheide, who travels extensively, is often unavailable. The Mariner tried to contact him by telephone Wednesday and was told he was in France for two weeks.

"It would be nice if I had an engineer or lawyer who was there from beginning to end," Egan said.

Egan said he wants the doors of communication between his office and Ordelheide to be open.

"I have heard of, but not seen, plans for a barn, swimming pools, a bridge between the two structures and extensive landscaping," Egan wrote. "This may very well exceed the zoning by-laws letter and intention of a restaurant and hotel with customary access uses.

"I urge you to prepare a petition to the zoning board of appeals for a special permit or any other relief as is necessary," he stated. "This is in addition to any approvals that you will need for the planning board and other commissions. Your plans should be as complete as possible and you should be prepared for an extensive review process."

New fiber optic phone lines

Bell Atlantic engineer Charlie Murphy appeared before selectmen on Tuesday night to explain a new fiber optic system of cables that will significantly lessen the length of future phone outages.

"Fiber optic cables come back much quicker than copper cables, and we saw that during the outage in June," Murphy said. "The fiber optic cables were back within a few hours, while the copper wiring took a couple of days to fix."

Selectman Merle Brown was not pleased that the fiber optic cables could not prevent outages.

"Even a few hours is too much," he said. "Is there a way to run a secondary line to the police and fire departments so we don't lose 911 service again?"

Murphy said that constructing another line would be too expensive, but said that the new cables would make future outages less prolonged.

"The important thing is that we get 911 back fast," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "This way, it seems like the downtime won't be as significant.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

A GOOD SPORTING BET

The link between sports and chiropractic is a natural one. Athletes and exercisers of all types strive to utilize their bodies in the most effective manner, and chiropractors are trained in biomechanics. Thus, chiropractors can make recommendations and offer guidelines on everything from conditioning techniques and strength training to strategies for injury prevention and enhanced performance. In addition, chiropractors can counsel athletes with nutritional advice that can be beneficial both on and off the playing field. In the unfortunate event that an athlete should sustain an injury, the chiropractor can apply his or her extensive musculoskeletal expertise to the healing process. In cases that are warranted, the chiropractor will also make referrals to appropriate health practioners.

At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we will only accept you as a patient if we sincerely feel we can help you. We are committed to health and want to eliminate sickness, pain, and suffering through a healthy balanced lifestyle, wellness education, and natural alternative health care. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we start by listening. We listen to what you want to accomplish with your health and body. We will inform you about the services we offer and hopefully answer any questions you may have. Our "Mother's Morning Out" program can give your children self-confidence and self trust. For gentle and safe chiropractic care that will take you into the 21st century, call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment.

P.S. Chiropractors are particularly adept at helping athletes and exercisers with limited range of motion.

Swim team closes out season with a win

By Barbara Orsini Linn
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The last swim meet of the summer was a blast. We all had a great time as guests of the Duxbury Yacht Club - what a pretty area. I thought we were on a picnic at this lovely park-like setting.

For those, that could, sitting under the welcomed shade trees was a treat! Everyone especially loved it when the Ice Cream Truck arrived. It seems as if the only thing missing to this picnic-like atmosphere were the hot dogs and hamburgers.

The Score: Cohasset 374, Duxbury Yacht Club 217

And what a fabulous meet for Cohasset it was. The Cohasset swim team was in razor-edge form, ready to take-on its final competitor of the summer before the championships. It was not all a "cake-walk", however, as the Duxbury Yacht Club (DYC) proved to be a terrific competitor, too. This team had some excellent challengers that kept Cohasset on its toes. Cohasset was pleased to be the guests of the fine DYC.

This beautiful, hot, sunny, "winning day" culminated with an Awards Gala for the Cohasset Swim and Dive Teams at the Cohasset High School. "The evening of the summer" for these teams, had a large turnout. It was fun to see this entire group of swimmers, divers, parents, volunteers, et al, in something else other than bathing suits and sunglasses.

Everyone looked tanned, and sometimes sunburned, and very "spiffy". There were delicious treats to nibble on, a nice time to have relaxing conversations, and grand expectations as all the swimmers and divers waited for their names to be called to receive their accolades and trophy.

Debra Regan closes in on the finish of the butterfly.

Chairwoman Sarah Markert gave thanks and praise to the swimmers and divers, as well as to everyone involved in making this year's swimming and diving events such a success.

Preceding the presentation of the Coaches Memorial Trophy, coach Allison Hughes read an excerpt from a speech composed by coach Abby White.

White wrote this speech for the dedication in 1985 when when the first trophy was presented to the Nourie Delaney Family in memory of their son, Mark Nourie Delaney. Each year, this Trophy is presented to the swimmer that the coaches believe exemplifies those attributes that Mark Nourie Delaney possessed.

For example, the Trophy represents "giving it your all", leadership, determination, dedication, and a natural enthusiasm and love of the sport.

This year, the Mark Nourie Delaney Memorial Trophy was presented to Delia Regan.

Congratulations on receiving such an honor!

Hughes announced the names of all of the parents and volunteers that helped to make these swim and dive events memorable, and thanked them for their hard work and dedication.

She expressed how vitally important each volunteer's role is in order to conduct a successful swim meet.

Hughes then went on to the procession of trophies, presented in categories, to this fine Swim Team! Many heartfelt applause resounded throughout the evening.

Cohasset was still not finished. The evening continued with a chaperoned dance at the high school. A great time was had by all, bringing this exciting and challenging season of swimming and diving competition with our neighboring Towns to a close. It seems as though we just began.

See you at the new millennium's first swimming and diving competi-

Kenyans favorites in Falmouth

The African Invasion descends on Cape Cod for Sunday's 27th running of the Falmouth Road Race.

TRACKSIDE

JOE REARDON

Don't expect any American runners to break the stronghold the fabulous Kenyan athletes have held for the past decade over the prestigious 7.1 mile course which runs from Woods Hole to Falmouth Heights. A swollen field of 9,000 runners, including runners from Pembroke, are expected to break from the narrow start at 10 a.m.

Defending champions Khalid Khannouchi of Morocco and Kenya's Catherine Ndereba are strong favorites to repeat their 1998 victories. More then $89,000 in prize money is on the line for the world-class runners in several age groups.

African runners swept the first 14 places last year. Jeff Jacobs of Roscoe, IL., was the top American. Jacobs crossed the finish line in 15th place with a time of 33:15, a full 1:26 behind Khannouchi.

Khannouchi is looking to make Falmouth history in becoming the first runner to win three consecutive titles. He won't have an easy time of it, however, with a crop of Kenyan runners expected to challenge him for the win. Course-record holder Joseph Kimani, who scorched the field with his 31:36 in 1996, looks to be Khannouchi's major competition after recording the world's fastest 10K on the road this year. Khannouchi crossed the line 12 seconds shy of the record '98 with a time of 31:48.

Also entered is 1995 victor Joseph Kamau, last year's fourth-place finisher Hezron Otwori and John Korir, who finished second to Kannouchi last year. Korir won the Utica Boilermaker 15K in July and was runner-up to Khannouchi at the Peachtree 10K on July 4. Another runner to watch is Kenya's Peter Githuka, who finished third in '97 and fifth in '98.

Ndereba set the women's mark of 35:17 in '96 and won last year's race with a 36:10. She is also looking to win their third Falmouth and should be challenged by Ethiopia's Derartu Tulu, the '92 10,000 meter at the Olympic Games in Barcelona. Tulu followed up that win with a fourth-place at 1996 Olympics in Atlanta.

Two-time Falmouth winner Colleen de Reuck of South Africa finished a strong second last year and always run well over the scenic route.

Despite the expected dominance of the Africans, there is plenty of intrigue on the American side, particularly in the Over-50 division. Three-time winner Bill Rodgers

Cohasset Sailing Club

Lipton Cup Regatta

The 13th annual Lipton Cup Regatta was sailed in Quincy Bay July 10 and 11 in brisk winds that made for exciting racing for all the junior and adult classes.

Racing for Cohasset Sailing Club in the Club 420 Class was the team of Robin Cunningham and Lane Forrer who placed in the back half of the large and very experienced fleet of sailors from all of Eastern Massachusetts.

Mass. Bay Sailing Triple-handed Championships

The team of Kate Henderson, Betsy Reynolds, and Julie Shea represented CSC at the annual Triple-Handed Championships sailed at the Hingham Yacht Club July 12.

Racing in Rhodes 19s, the CSC team finished in overall fourth place while placing in the top three boats in most of the individual races.

Scituate Junior Regatta

The Cohasset Sailing Club opened its summer racing season at the Scituate Junior Regatta July 6 and 7.

Racing in Scituate Harbor in the Turnabout fleet was the veteran team of skipper Betsy Reynolds and crew Julie Shea, who placed fifth in the 10-boat fleet of South Shore sailors. In the competitive Club 420 fleet, Greg O'Connell and Tommy Anderson got their first racing experience as a team in a high performance racing boat.

Racing coach Amy Logue was happy with the performance of the crews that raced in their first regatta of the year last week under difficult conditions that ranged from very light air Monday to high winds Tuesday.

and two-time victor Frank Shorter will compete head-to-head as they have done so many times in their career.

Rodgers won the 1974 Falmouth and talked Shorter into running in 1975. Shorter soundly defeated the four-time Boston Marathon champion, then came back the following year to win after taking home the silver medal in the Olympic Marathon in Montreal.

Rodgers out-dueled two-time winner Alberto Salazar in 1978 and Shorter finished fifth. Craig Virgin won the 1979 race with Rodgers and Shorter finishing third and fifth, respectively.

Falmouth favorite Joan Samuelson, who has won a record six titles, will compete in the Masters division and seven-time Boston Marathoner Jean Driscoll will be competing in the wheelchair category against five-time Falmouth winner Candace Cable, the course-record holder.

A cross-country preview

For many high school cross-country teams in the area it serves as the perfect conditioning barometer. The same holds true for collegiate runners whose cross-country seasons begin very early in September.

For those runners weary of competing exclusively on asphalt, is the opportunity to cover winding paths and across grass fields.

And most enticing of all, runners get the chance to race head-to-head in separate age-groups in the Hanover Trail Run and Trail Walk on Aug. 29, beginning at 8:30 a.m. at Hanover High School.

Held on the Indians' home 5K (3.1 miles), double-loop course, the trail runs are broken up into age groups ranging from Under 14 (1.5 miles) to Males 60 and over. The women's categories range from Under 14 to Females 50 and over. There is also an all-ages walk over one loop of 1.5 miles.

Proceeds from the run and walk will benefit the John Lingley Scholarship Fund, David Zwicker Scholarship Fund and the Hanover Police Boys and Girls Club.

Teams consist of three to five runners in the same age group and will be scored according by place with the top-three finishers figuring into the overall total.

Prizes will be awarded to the winner of each division, as well as the first Hanover police officer, firefighter or EMT. A continuous raffle of gift certificates and merchandise from local businesses is also on tap.

The cost is $8 if postmarked by Aug, 21 and $10 on race day. T-shirts will be available to the first 200 pre-registrants. For more information on trail run, call Gary or Eileen Edwards at 781-826-7219.

OBITUARIES

John Reimé Roy

John Reimé Roy, 82, of Cohasset, an engineer and entrepreneur who launched worldwide energy corporations and loved the arts, died Aug. 5 at home.

John Reimé Roy

In the 1950s, Mr. Roy founded Royco, which designed and sold turnkey boiler systems to power plants and large industrial clients.

Mr. Roy founded Airtek in 1968. The company sold pollution control systems based on his own patented design.

He built pollution control systems all over the world, including a smokestack for a power plant in Kuwait, which at the time was the tallest structure in the Mideast.

Mr. Roy later was chairman of the Hingham-based Intercontinental Energy Corp., founded by his two sons, Stephen Roy and Peter Roy, both of Cohasset. All six members of his family were involved in the business, founded in 1985.

The independent electric power company developed, owned and operated electric power plants throughout the Northeast. One of IEC's plants provided about 10 percent of the electric power for the Boston area.

Peter Roy said his father was "active until the end."

"He was French. He loved to travel. He loved going to France and London," he said. "He had a great appreciation for the beautiful things in life."

Born in Somerville, he studied engineering at St. Francis Xavier University in Canada in the 1930s.

Mr. Roy started his career at the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy in the early 1940s. He worked as an engineer designing parts for Navy vessels during World War II.

Mr. Roy was particularly proud of the fact his children have earned a combined seven Harvard degrees.

In addition to sons Stephen and Peter, he leaves his wife, Mary Louise Roy; another son, Jock R. Roy of Cambridge; two daughters, Jane L. Roy and Ellen S. Roy, both of Cohasset; and nine grandchildren.

The funeral service is private. There are no visiting hours.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St.

Donations may be made to the Cohasset Fire Department Defibrillator Fund, care of Cohasset Fire Department, 44 Elm St., Cohasset 02025.

St. Stephen's Episcopal worship schedule

Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church: 16 Highland Ave., 383-1083; Clergy: The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler, rector; Andrew J. Stoessel, assistant for children and youth. Sunday worship: 8 and 10 a.m.; 10 a.m. worship followed by fellowship time in the courtyard. The 75th Anniversary Carillon Recital by Todd Fair of the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor is at 6 p.m.. Don't forget the carillon anniversary clambake Aug. 29 prior to Carillon recital. For tickets, call the church office (383-1083). Midweek Eucharist is Wednesdays at 9:30 a.m. Visit them on the Web for daily prayer and scripture verse at www.ststephenscohasset.org

The scripture lessons for the 12th Sunday after Pentecost include: Isaiah's declaration that the temple will be a house of prayer for all nations; Paul's belief that God's salvation will include Jews as well as Gentiles; and Jesus' conversation with the Canaanite woman and the healing of her daughter. Saint Stephen's welcomes visitors. Preacher: The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler.

The Lion King

Staff photos/Alan Chapman

Top left, Young Simba, played by Sam Gaine, roars over the domain he will inherit in the Children's Drama Workshop production of "The Lion King." Above, Caitlin O'Connell (Nava), May McCarthy (Timon), Alec Barber-Grossi (Pambaa) and Adam Haracz (Simba) in a scene from the popular show.

At left, Daniel McCarthy as Rafiki is the Lion King's mentor. The curtain rose on the production at the high school last week for family and friends.

Gas leak has Selectman Koed fuming

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A gasoline leak underneath Depot Court has Selectman Fred Koed concerned that the proximity of the contamination to the Elm Meadow wellfield could be a problem in case of a water emergency.

"We opened the street up and hit gasoline in 1996, when I was water commissioner," Koed said. "The fire department and the state came down and we were told to put the contaminated soil back in."

The gasoline was found at the Brown's Auto Repair site, which is a former gas station. The Elm Meadow wellfield, which has been offline since 1989, is located within 200 feet of the site.

"What I'm worried about is that the gasoline may have the potential to migrate to the Elm Meadow wellfield, which could be an important backup source of water to the town," he said.

At the selectmen's meeting on Tuesday night, Town Manager Mark Haddad said that there is a possibility that Elm Meadow may be reactivated along with the Sohier Street wellfield, which is approximately 1000 feet from the former gas station and has also been inactive for many years.

Koed said that the Elm Meadow and Sohier wellfields could be an important source of water in case a problem occurs with the town's water tank.

"In an emergency, the wellfields could provide enough water so that people could get their domestic water use, such as brushing their teeth and taking showers," he said. "Right now, we'd have to connect into the water supply of Scituate or Hingham, which may not be possible in case of a drought."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that John Fitzgerald of the Department of Environmental Protection [DEP] assured him that if there were ever a proposed date to reactivate Elm Meadow, DEP would require a complete evaluation of sources in the area, including that at the former gas station.

Because DEP does not believe the contamination is a threat to the drinking supply, Haddad said it may be a while before the state addresses the problem.

"Because DEP does not believe that the site will impact the current drinking supply, it is a moderate priority for DEP," Haddad said of the information he was given by DEP. "Because it is a moderate threat to the Elm Meadow and Sohier aquifers, it needs to be cleaned up to the highest standard. However, DEP said they ca promise action in the near future

Koed said he would feel more c fortable if the town hired an expert to survey the level of contamination underneath Depot Court.

"We need to find out where else the gasoline is and figure out exactly what's going on," he said. "I'd feel a lot better having an expert go in and determine the extent of the contamination."

Inmates to work for teens

Garage gets a boost from Braintree Alternative Center

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The teen center project received a tremendous boost this week when plans were finalized to have inmates from the Braintree Alternative Center work on the building, beginning the second week in September.

"We've been operating on an extremely tight budget, and the savings in labor costs will help us tremendously," said Joe McElroy, who has lent his fundraising and organizational talents to the project. "The people from the Braintree Alternative Center have said they'll stay with us until project completion, which we think will be around Columbus Day."

Youth resources committee member Tony Carbone said that the inmates would be doing a number of different construction projects.

SPECIAL REPORT

A graveyard of rusty buoys leaches lead into the groundwater beneath South Weymouth Naval Air Station. For a special report on the status and plans for the largest tract of undeveloped land on the South Shore, see pullout section inside.

To our readers

Fall on the South Shore brings about the inevitable change — the days get shorter; the temperature crisper and foliage along our main streets and back roads becomes a riot of color.

Your hometown newspaper will also be experiencing a change this fall we believe will enhance improvements we have continued to make over the past few years. With the first issue in October, this newspaper will go from a tabloid-sized format to a broadsheet. The change will provide us with additional opportunities for front page news as well as a better showcase for our award-winning photography. We see it as a chance to continue focusing on our design and improve our overall packaging.

What won't change is our commitment to quality local news, service to our advertisers and the community. We appreciate and respect the role our paper plays in informing, educating and entertaining the community.

We are fortunate to have readers who feel connected to their hometown newspaper and we value that sense of ownership. This decision to move to a larger format comes after months of study and research with focus groups. Participants in the focus groups told us the new size is more favorable, easier to read and navigate and offers additional space for local coverage.

With the size change comes opportunities to offer readers and customers an improved separate classified section — with automotive, employment and line ads as anchors. The change also allows us to explore enhanced editorial sections, such as sports and arts and entertainment.

The next few weeks will be busy ones for our readers, getting back to school and coming off of summer vacations. We too will be busy gearing up for this change and welcome the chance to talk with our readers. We encourage your questions and concerns and ask that you call me directly at (781) 837-4574 or e-mail me at mskala@cnc.com. As always, your input helps us shape decisions about your hometown newspaper.

Teen garage volunteers needed

Cohasset youth resources, in preparation of opening the Teen Garage is looking for volunteers who would like to work directly with teens. Funding may eventually become available for these positions; however, volunteers are needed for the shorter term. Please call the recreation department at 383-4109 if interested in this unique opportunity.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Aug. 24.

Special Town Meeting date is set

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting that this fall's Special Town Meeting will be held on Nov.14.

Elm Street grant decision due

The decision on a proposed grant that would lead to a reconfiguration of Elm Street is expected to be handed down this week, said Dean Rizzo, chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force.

"If we get the grant, then we'll have a number of public forums to discuss the specifics of the project," he said. "If we don't get the money, the project won't happen."

The Elm Street proposal has been a controversial topic among Elm Street residents, many of whom are divided upon whether or not to support the project.

Boathouse doors to be replaced

Jack Buckley, president of the Cohasset Maritime Institute, said that the glass doors which have been installed on the boathouse at the Hagerty Property will be replaced.

The new doors will be wooden, which the historical commission said is necessary for the boathouse to retain its historic character.

"I talked to Hamilton Tewksbury [a member of the historical commission] and explained that the glass doors are merely temporary," Buckley said. "There was plywood covering the doorway and we needed access. The glass doors were donated and were easy to install."

Tewksbury said that the historical commission was satisfied with Buckley's explanation.

Haddad to meet with Lobster Lab president

In an effort to ease tensions between selectmen and the Cohasset Lobster Lab, Town Manager Mark Haddad will meet with Lobster Lab president Kevin Ulmer to discuss the state of the property.

Some selectmen have expressed concern about the state of the building, which is located on the Hagerty Property at the end of Parker Avenue.

"It's been well documented that I'm a supporter of the Lobster Lab, but I have to say that I'd like to see some action," said selectman Diane Sullivan.

At issue is whether Ulmer should have to paint the building when the Lobster lab is planning renovations to the property in the future.

"Why paint it if you're going to rip it down?" said selectman Fred Koed.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said that the building should be painted if it's going to be a long time before the building is altered.

"It depends if we're talking about two months or three years," she said.

War Memorial to be replaced

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that plaques have been taken down from the War Memorial at the Cove while the memorial is renovated.

"The construction crew which was digging for the James Brook project discovered that the memorial is leaning," Haddad said.

Haddad said the memorial would be reconstructed as is and the plaques would be replaced at no cost to the town.

Memorial mass to honor shipwreck victims

Tragedy recalled in both Ireland and New England

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Desperate to escape poverty and English oppression, over 120 men, women, and children boarded the brig St. John and sailed from Ireland's Galway Harbor on September 5, 1849 in search of the opportunity to attain a higher standard of living in America.

Tragically, most of them never made it. Victims of a horrific shipwreck off the Cohasset coast, at least 99 of the Irish died at sea, within view of the land which they hoped would bring them greater opportunity and freedom.

A memorial mass will be held to remember the victims on Sunday, Oct. 10 at St. Anthony's Church, commemorating the 150th anniversary of the tragedy. The mass will be conducted by Cardinal Bernard Law from the archdiocese of Boston, and more than 100 people from Ireland are expected to come to Cohasset to remember their countrymen.

"The mass will be at 3 p.m. and we're expecting to have a procession to Cohasset Central Cemetery and a wreath-laying ceremony at the Celtic Cross," said John Sullivan, a Scituate lawyer and member of a committee of Irish-Americans from greater Boston that is arranging a series of event to honor the victims.

Sullivan said that there would be music by Larry Reynolds as well as other Irish musicians from the Boston area and Ireland. A short speaking program will also be held at St. Anthony's, which the Cohasset Historical Society is helping the commemoration committee to plan.

While all of the events that will commemorate the tragedy have yet to be finalized, the fact that the passengers aboard the St. John perished so close to their dream of a better life in America is heartbreaking.

Leaving cherished family members behind, they left the only home they had ever known, uncertain of what the future across the Atlantic might bring.

The horror which they encountered off the Cohasset coast was unspeakable. As the St. John neared the Massachusetts coastline, a violent storm was raging. On the morning of October 7, Captain Martin Oliver found himself off Minot's Light, along the Cohasset shoreline. There he found the brig Kathleen, which had already dropped anchor in an attempt to ride out the storm.

Oliver followed suit, but as the weather grew more treacherous, the ship's anchors began to drag. The crew frantically cut away the masts of the ship, but the ship headed straight for the rocky coastline despite its best efforts.

Enveloped in the grasp of a mighty breaker, the St. John struck an outer ledge of the Grampuses. After crashing against the rock, the ship's hull broke into pieces. Crew members tried to launch a life boat, but the angry sea destroyed it as ferociously as it had the St. John.

Those aboard the boat were literally helpless. Weakened by the malnutrition and fever that was all too common aboard ships voyaging across the Atlantic, many of the passengers were physically unable to stay afloat.

Those aboard the boat were literally helpless. Weakened by the malnutrition and fever that was all too common aboard ships voyaging across the Atlantic, many of the passengers were physically unable to stay afloat. Even though many of the passengers lived in coastal areas, the ability to swim was not common in the 1840s, as mistrust of the sea was pervasive throughout society at that time.

Only 22 of the original 121 Irish who boarded the St. John yearning for a better life in America would ever set foot upon its soil.

At least 99 people were known dead, but the number dead may be much greater than previously thought.

"We've come to think that there were more than 99 people killed that day," said Sullivan. "On those voyages to America, ships were required to keep a ledger which limited the number of passengers to an allowed maximum. To make extra money, ship captains and crews would often allow extra passengers and there would be no record of those passengers."

Some of the stories concerning the 99 known dead put a human face on the tragedy, which is too often concealed by numbers.

Entire families were wiped out, including that of Patrick Sweeney, whose wife and eight of his nine children drowned before his eyes. With his last surviving child cradled in his arms, Sweeney reached frantically for a lifeboat but was enveloped in a wave that brought he and his child under. They were never seen again.

The Celtic Cross was erected in 1914 at Cohasset Central Cemetery to mark the burial site and remember the victims of the Brig St. John disaster.

Only 45 of the deceased were able to be recovered and they were buried in a mass grave at Cohasset Central Cemetery. The burial service was conducted by the Reverend Joseph Osgood of the Unitarian Church. In 1914, the Celtic cross was erected at the cemetery to mark the burial sight and remember the victims.

Those who survived did so in large part due to the heroic work of Cohasset residents, who provided food and shelter for the survivors, and helped them to bury their friends and neighbors.

The records from the time are incomplete, and so it is not known how many of the survivors stayed in America and how many returned to Ireland or what became of them.

While pinpointing exactly how many died or what became of the survivors may never be determined conclusively, the impact of the tragic shipwreck upon Cohasset is undeniable.

"The shipwreck of the Brig St. John is the most famous historical incident ever to happen in Cohasset," said David Wadsworth of the Cohasset Historical Society. "It's also the worst shipwreck ever to occur in this area."

This story is the first in a two-part series describing the tragic shipwreck of the brig St. John. Part two will examine in greater detail the social, political, and economic conditions that resulted in either the immigration or starvation of two million Irish between 1845 and 1855. We will also provide more details regarding the events to honor the 150th anniversary of the shipwreck as they become available.

Future of marina expansion hits rough seas

Encroaches into residential zone

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Don't expect to see business at Cohasset Harbor Marina shrink anytime soon.

Although from all indications the zoning board will rule the expansion of the marina is encroaching in a residential zone and is therefore operating illegally, it is unlikely owner Paul Trendowicz will go away without a fight.

Zoning board members, who deliberated on two appeals to the marina expansion last week, were resigned that the matter would end up in superior court.

"You can count on it," chairman Woody Chittick said.

What's at issue is a 1969 color-coded town zoning map where the yellow coloring — indicating a residential district — extends to the thread or middle of Bailey's Creek.

The zoning board sided with Richard A. Henderson, attorney for Victoria and Michael Hurley, one of two Border Street couples appealing decisions by the building inspector not to stop expansion of the marina. Henderson said the yellow coloring was not a printer's error — as town counsel speculated — but was deliberately painted there to show that the residential district extended into the water. Under the town by-laws, marinas are prohibited in a residential district without a variance. Cohasset Harbor Marina is in a light industrial zone but has expanded into a residential zone, the zoning board determined.

The zoning board studied the map and the text of the related town meeting minutes and determined the town intended on having residential district go to the thread of the channel.

"There was great scrutiny given to creating this map," Chittick said. "I don't think there was any error at all."

This was a key issue for the zoning board, which — once it agreed with Henderson — would then have jurisdiction over the marina expansion.

The zoning board will make its de-

Water commission takes Crocker II land for pipe

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission has exercised its eminent domain powers for the second time in its pursuit of a new water tank on Scituate Hill. At the Aug. 17 water commission meeting, the commissioners voted to take by eminent domain a little less than an acre of land owned by Crocker II Realty Trust. Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill owner Paul Barry is an officer in the Crocker II Trust and an owner of the land the water commission is taking.

Water commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. said the commissioners voted to use their eminent domain authority to take .79 acres of land for an appraised cost of $52,500. McNabb said neither Barry nor his attorney attended the meeting. Barry's attorney, Robert Schwandt Jr., of Hanify and King in Boston, could not be reached for comment.

The water commission used the eminent domain taking to acquire a permanent to build a 30-foot -wide access road to the tank. The pipe that delivers water to the town will run under the access road. The commissioners also acquired a temporary easement for a 20-foot-wide access road for construction of the tank.

The land taking keeps the water tank project on track for completion by December, 2000, McNabb said. Last week, the zoning board of appeals approved the water commission's application for the 75-foot-high water tank. McNabb said the water commissioners need approval from two more agencies to finalize their plans. The water commission will present its plan to the planning board by the end of September for site review. Also in September, Tutela Engineering will a detailed site and construction plan to the Department of Environmental Protection.

"We're still on track to build the tank by December, 2000."
— John McNabb, water commission

"We will submit our plans to the planning board, but they do not vote the project up or down," McNabb said. "Then we'll see how fast Tutela can prepare the detailed plan for DEP. Once that plan is submitted, DEP has 90 days to review it. They won't deny it, but they may ask us to tweak it in certain areas. We're still on track to build the tank by December, 2000."

Taking the Crocker II land gives the water commission all the property it needs to build the tank. On May 26, the water commission acquired a permanent easement by eminent domain from J. Michael Susi and Sons for a half-acre of land on Scituate Hill for the actual water tank. The water commission paid $52,000 for that taking— $40,000 for the tank parcel and $12,000 for an additional 1/2-acre of land for a temporary construction easement. The land is still technically owned by J. Michael Susi and Sons under the name Westwood Limited Partners.

The water commissioners had been negotiating with representatives of the Crocker II for the access road. Previously, McNabb said the water commissioners had been negotiating with Crocker II for several months to obtain land for the road in exchange for two stub connections to the water main. Last month, the water commission became dissatisfied with the pace of negotiations and filed a notice of intent to take the land for the road by eminent domain. McNabb said the commissioners had been waiting for Crocker II to choose a location for the road. McNabb said when it seemed Crocker II would not choose a location quickly, the commission decided to consider the possibility of taking the land.

At the time the commission declared its intent to take the land by eminent domain, Schwandt said he believed that negotiations would lead to a deal without any land taking. McNabb agreed that a deal was possible, but it never materialized.

The water commission has been attempting to find a spot for a new water tank since 1997. Two years ago, town meeting approved a request by the water commission for $1.4 million to build a new 2 million gallon water tank on Bear Hill next to the town's only other tank. Public disapproval of the Bear Hill site sent the water commissioners out in search of a new location Last year, town meeting allocated an extra $200,000 for the water commission to build the tank on Scituate Hill.

Members of the water commission say the town needs a new tank to take the other unit out of service for cleaning, and to provide more fire reserves for large fires or when water reserves drop below average levels in hot summer months.

Historical Society museums open for summer

Cohasset Historical Society's two summer museums at Elm Street, Cohasset Center, now are open for their regular summer season. The Capt. John Wilson Historical House and Maritime Museum are open each Tuesday through Sunday from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Admission is free and donations are welcome. The Capt. Wilson House will be open until Labor Day, and the Maritime Museum remains open through September.

The Capt. Wilson House, an 1810 sea-captain's home, is furnished with 19th-century artifacts from other early Cohasset homes, including furniture, furnishings, toys and other household equipment of that era.

Adjacent on Elm Street in the village is the Maritime Museum, once a ship chandlery for Samuel Bates' fishing fleet at Cohasset harbor.

Available at the Maritime Museum are the two volumes of Cohasset's history, the Rev. E.V. Bigelow's "Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset," vol. 1, and Burtram J. Pratt's vol. 2 of "Narrative-History."

The Cohasset Historical Society's phone number is (781) 383-1434.

Hingham commuter boat is sailing along

MBTA insists Greenbush is still in the works

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

State transportation officials held a press conference at Rowes Wharf on Tuesday to announce an expansion of the commuter boat service, but insisted that the controversial restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line would go forward as well.

"People are commuting from longer distances than they have before, and possess very different needs," said Secretary of Transportation and MBTA chairman Kevin Sullivan. "The boats give commuters a way to get to Boston without dealing with the congestion on Route 3 and 3A, and Greenbush would offer another choice."

Sullivan said that the MBTA recognizes that citizens of Hingham, Cohasset, and Scituate all have concerns regarding the train, but said that those concerns are not going to halt the project.

"We plan to push forward with Greenbush, being sensitive to the needs of those who have to live with the train," he said. "It's important to remember that this is a restoration of a previously existing rail line. It's not a novel idea."

While the dispute over Greenbush seems to be never-ending, the success of the commuter boats which run from Hingham to Boston Harbor has been a major success for the MBTA.

"The water transportation has been a little-known success story," Sullivan said. "Overall boat ridership has increased more than 70 percent over the past seven years, to a total of 1.3 million passengers in fiscal year 1999."

The Hingham commuter boats transport an average of 3,800 passengers a day, which increases to 4,000 during the summer months. So more than 900,000 people ride the Hingham to Boston commuter boat alone.

The commuter boat service from Hingham to Boston is a partnership between the MBTA and Boston Harbor Cruises. Sullivan said the program is supported with a $1.3 million subsidy from the state, and said that private-public partnerships such as this one are becoming increasingly valuable.

"The highway department can't solve the transportation needs for the Commonwealth alone," he said. "We have a ready, willing, and able private sector that can shoulder some of that burden."

Rick Nolan, managing partner of Boston Harbor Cruises, said that a third catamaran will be added to the Hingham-Boston fleet in October, but added that parking at Hewitt's Cove will have to be improved to meet the demand.

"Parking and inter-modal connections need to be improved, but we're working with Sullivan on that," he said.

Sullivan agreed that improving the parking situation was necessary for expanding the commuter boat service, but insisted that it would not be difficult to solve.

"Over the next several months, we'll need to accommodate more vehicles, but that is a good problem to have, and it's one that we can solve," he said.

While he didn't have any specific details about how to improve the parking situation, Sullivan mentioned altering the route of the MBTA 220 bus to go to Hewitt's Cove and creating more parking spaces as possible solutions that would be looked into.

"We're married to water transportation and we're trying to make Hingham more user-friendly," he said. "Water transportation will continue to grow long after the central artery project is completed."

Due to the great demand for the service, parking at Hewitt's Cove is often packed by 8 a.m. For those in the South Shore who work in Boston's financial district, only a short walk from Boston Harbor, the 25 to 38-minute boat ride is a quick and convenient way of getting to work.

"I work in the financial district, and taking the boat allows me to get in an extra 20 minutes of work in the morning," said Heather Thompson of Scituate. "I've been taking the boat since 1994 and I really enjoy the service. It's a million times better than driving."

As state Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan looks on, passenger, Heather Thompson of Scituate, talks about how nice commuting by boat is at a press conference at Rowe's Wharf on Tuesday.

Even with the state subsidy, the cost of riding the commuter boat is $4 each way, significantly more than the $2.50 average fare on commuter rail. Because of the expense, some have charged that the commuter boats are elitist, and Sullivan responded to that charge.

"I don't think this should be considered elitist at all," he said. "People on the South Shore ought to have a choice. There's no reason we can't walk and chew gum at the same time."

Money is short for Arrowood purchase

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

There are a lot of buyers suddenly interested in purchasing land that is slated to become the Arrowood Development in Scituate. The Department of Environmental Management (DEM), the town of Scituate, and the town of Cohasset all want to purchase the land, which is odd because the developers have started building 18 house lots on 65 acres of land and have already built a road and a shared septic system for the homes. The DEM and Cohasset want to buy the land for water protection measures, while residents in Scituate would like to see the land added to the adjacent Wompatuck State Park. There's just one problem: no one has the more than $1 million needed to buy the land from developers Mark and Walter Winchester.

Water commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. said the town of Cohasset has no money to contribute, but the water commission may be able to provide some funding.

"I think it's appropriate for the water commission to come up with some kind of funding," McNabb said. I cannot begin to speculate on how much we could afford. When the water commission purchased Lily Pond Estates in the mid 1990s for $1.5 million, there was a big fight at town meeting over the funding. This is farther away from our water supply and could be a case of out of sight, out of mind. And we don't have any money set aside, so any new spending would have to be offset by rate increases."

The water commission met on Tuesday night to discuss Arrowood, but the Winchesters did not attend the meeting. McNabb said the next step is to get a professional appraisal of the land's current value. McNabb said he is hopeful the Winchesters will pay for an independent appraisal. If they don't, the water commission will most likely pay for an appraisal, McNabb said.

"This is on hold until we get an appraisal," McNabb said.

Officials from DEM, Scituate and Cohasset met last week to try and come up with creative ways to purchase the land. Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand has expressed his support for the project. Durand instructed DEM to meet with officials from Cohasset and Scituate last week to discuss a joint land protection effort. State legislators are considering a bill in budget discussions to transfer $1 million to the Executive Office of environmental Affairs for the purchase of Arrowood. Cohasset and Scituate don't have the resources to purchase the land. DEM doesn't have enough money in its projected budget for fiscal year 2000, and the state budget impasse means most state agencies have no money to spend for the time being.

Last week's meeting ended with optimism that Scituate, Cohasset and DEM will be able to come up with some creative ways to raise money for the purchase. Officials are buoyed by the fact that the developers are willing to sell the land if they receive a satisfactory offer from state and local officials.

Scituate resident Vincent Bucca, has led the drive to urge DEM to purchase the land. He said Arrowood would burden Scituate's schools and infrastructure, which is why it would be better for the town to add the land to Wompatuck State Park.

"These are huge, four-bedroom homes being planned," Bucca said. "Homes like this would attract families with children. If each family had two children as predicted by state estimates, it would cost Scituate $2 million to educate them for 12 years."

Bucca said there are some clear hurdles that must be cleared for the purchase to go forward. DEM is interested in participating in the project only if the entire 65-acre is purchased. Some local officials at the meeting suggested purchasing only a portion of the land to save money.

"DEM doesn't want to split the property because they are interested in buying it for regional water protection," Bucca said.

Bucca also pointed out that purchasing all of Arrowood would allow the state to connect Wompatuck to land on the other side owned by the town of Scituate.

Cohasset would like to see the land added to Wompatuck because Arrowood's shared septic system is only 200 feet from the Lily Pond watershed, and 2 homes will be within 100 feet of the watershed. On the side of the land farthest away from the watershed, two tributaries carry water back to Lily Pond.

Scituate successfully placed a number of protective restrictions on the project. A deed restriction bans the use of pesticides on the land. The purchase and sales agreements contain provisions allowing the Scituate Conservation Agent to go on the land for regular inspections. But even with those restrictions, it would be better for Cohasset to have park land instead of a new subdivision, said McNabb.

"Even though the land developers have taken extraordinary measures to protect the watershed, it would be better from a water protection perspective if the land was not developed," McNabb said.

Hazardous waste collections scheduled

Cohasset residents may attend the HHW collections listed below with the written permission of the Dept. Of Public Works. Permission is not required if the collection is in the resident's hometown. All attendees must provide proof of residency. The town of residence is responsible for the cost.

The following hazardous waste collections are scheduled:

Aug. 21, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Plymouth, DPW at Camelot Park.

Sept. 18, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Cohasset, DPW Garage on Cedar Street.

Sept. 25, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Marshfield, to be announced.

Oct. 16, 9 a.m. to noon, Hingham, Plymouth River School on High Street.

Oct. 23, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Norwell, Highway Garage on Route 123.

Residents wishing to attend should call the DPW, board of health or the South Shore Recycling Cooperative at 508-785-8318 for a list of acceptable and unacceptable substances, permission and directions. Latex paint is not a hazardous waste. Quantities are limited to 15 gallons or 30 lbs. of material per car. Commercial "Very Small Quantity Generators" may call ahead and dispose of materials for a fee at some events.

Red Lion Inn project roars ahead

Work on the Lilac House is halted

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Responding to concerns that changes were being made to the Red Lion Inn and Lilac House without the necessary planning board approval, the board called a special public meeting on Monday night to discuss the situation with the lawyers and architects working on the project.

The Lilac House, which it appears will become a bakery and bistro on the first floor, and has a proposed function room on the second floor, is being radically altered from its existing site plan. For that reason, the planning board will have to see a complete set of site plans for the proposed alterations before construction is allowed to continue.

"There will be no new construction on the Lilac House property until it goes through the filing process," said planning board member Robert Sturdy. "There are major alterations to the site plan. Construction on the Red Lion Inn can go on until that happens."

In a letter sent to Red Lion Inn and Lilac House owner Gerd Ordelheide, building commissioner Robert Egan said that the only work that could be done on the Lilac House is within the remaining structure until he sees an engineered, dimensioned site plan with setbacks which is in accordance with town bylaws or Ordelheide seeks a special permit with the zoning board of appeals [ZBA] to allow the extension of a non-conforming structure.

With the issue of the Lilac House temporarily on hold, planning board members tried to approve at least a part of the project so construction may continue while more they await more complete plans.

"It's the responsibility of this board to see what we can do to at least get part of this plan approved," Sturdy said. "Our concern is the appearance of the building, because determining whether or not it adheres to building codes is up to Bob Egan."

Project manager Jack Valle told the board that Ordelheide wanted the inn to have an old feel, with a New England-style exterior.

"We'd like to use white cedar shingles for the roof instead of asphalt shingles," he said. "We'd like to use red cedar clapboard on the outside, though we haven't decided what color that will be. We also have windows already picked out and the trim will be white on those."

The planning board unanimously approved the type of shingles, clapboard, and windows which Valle wanted to use, which will allow construction crews to do a significant amount of work on the exterior of the Red Lion Inn.

Sturdy cautioned, however, that the board wanted to see complete site plans as soon as possible.

"We're not going to hear that plans are three weeks off, and then another three weeks off," he said. "We want to see rapid closure to this process. We want to pin this thing down and get it on track."

Some residents disagreed with the gradual process by which the planning board has approved work on the Red Lion Inn to this point.

"It looks like the Red Lion Inn and Lilac House are going to be one plan, and this piecemeal fashion by which this is happening is going to cause more trouble rather than less," said Neal Glick, 7 Spring. "Why are there two separate site plans? This is happening in real time."

Planning board chairman Alfred Moore said that commercial construction projects are often approved in phases, noting a recent example in town.

"Business plans usually evolve," he said. "Look at the Stop and shop on route 3A, for instance. That wasn't all completed at once. It took some time and it got done right."

Glick was still concerned that the project was going to have a major impact in his neighborhood, and that plans for both the Lilac House and the Red Lion Inn have to be studied jointly.

"I find it almost beyond belief that they have no plan for the whole property," he said. "Are they saying they don't know what they're going to do?"

Valle told Glick and other concerned citizens that the architects working on the site have some idea about what will ultimately be included, but are not attempting to hide anything.

"We have a good idea where we'll put the pool, which will be adjacent to the left side of the Red Lion Inn," he said. "The other site work is just moving materials around so we can work on different parts of the building."

Those living near the site also wanted to know if the proposed function room at the Lilac House would include a liquor license, which would have to be approved by selectmen.

Work on the Red Lion Inn is moving ahead but the project to expand the Lilac House next door was halted this week until the planning board sees some complete plans.

AROUND TOWN

DEAN'S LIST AT UCONN

Connecticut College sends us word that two Cohasset students have been named to the Dean's Honors or Dean's High Honors List for the 1999 spring semester:

Christopher Stewart Adams, Class of '99, with a major in psychology, of 178 North Main St.

Brooke Conlin Lombardy, Class of 2000, with a major in sociology-based human relations of 27 Windy Hill Rd

Congratulations!

NEW ARRIVAL

Martha and Nickolas Gianibas have wonderful news for all of us to delight in, they have a brand new baby boy! His name is Peter Nickolas Gianibas, born at South Shore Hospital July 26, at 2:18 p.m. Peter weighed 8 lbs. 5 oz. and was 20 inches long. He has two big sisters to help Mom share the love, Ashley (who is 5) and Brittany (who is 3). Peter's maternal grandparents are John and Mary Maynard of Cohasset, his paternal grandmother is Mrs. Margaret Gianibas of Hull. We certainly send you all every single good wish that we can, and we know that your whole family will love Peter to pieces! We can't wait to see "grampa and grandmother" Maynard walking Peter "Around Town."

HONORS AT TUFTS

Michael Kasameyer, a mechanical engineering student at Tufts University, made the dean's list for the spring semester. Michael also has more news — he spent an entire semester at the University of Sussex and traveled all over the area while he was there.

Perhaps he will send details to us at a later date; sounds like he had quite an experience!

PROVIDENCE COLLEGE NEWS

Two area students have been named to the dean's list at Providence College for the spring 1999 semester: Alison Kinchla, Class of 2002, who is majoring in political science, and Andrea Freeman, Class of 2001, who is majoring in management.

We are ever-so-proud of both of you!

AU REVOIR

The Markert family called to ask that we say goodbye to all, they are going to Toronto, Canada, to live. They want to be sure to thank everyone they came in touch with — teachers, coaches, parents and friends; hopefully they will be back in a while, they were such a nice family, and such an addition to the community!

'MAN OF THE YEAR'

Had the nicest chat with Justine Hoffman the other day; she had great news to share!

Every year her brother, Joe Hoffman, gets together with his Boston College alumni, and this year he was voted "Man of the Year." Part of this honor is that Joe could be in charge of designating the Charity of the Year and he chose Braintree Rehabilitation Hospital, where he set up the Joyce Hoffman Trust with $14,000 in the "kitty," to help others as the Braintree Rehabilitation Hospital helped his mother. What a guy!

With the donations, people who may be in need of rehabilitation without the proper funds, can be helped.

What a tribute to Joyce (who, by the way, is doing wonderfully well) and what a tribute to Joe! Great son, great man, we are proud to know you, Joe, and even prouder of your efforts!

SOCCER CAMP A HIT

Finally, if you missed the action, you really missed a lot! The South Shore soccer camp, under the direction of Larry Shultz and Jon Anderson, was an outstanding success! Almost 400 soccer players took part in learning team play. It was an incredible sight to see all of those children and their coaches together, and to see how much each soccer player learned! As the kids say, "totally awesome!"

WELLESLEY SCHOLAR ATHLETE

Dawn Meehan graduated with honors from Wellesley College.

Dawn Meehan was graduated from Wellesley College cum laude. An economics major, Dawn earned first year academic distinction and completed her time at Wellesley with a 4.0 G.P.A.

During her junior year, Dawn studied international economics and culture at the University of South Wales in Sydney, Australia.

Active in many areas, she was a member of Wellesley's championship swimming and diving team. Dawn was a top 10 diver at the Seven Sister Championships, New eight Championships and was a member of the academic All American Team.

As Chair of special programs for the Student Admissions Council, Dawn delivered an address to more than 700 accepted students and their families at spring open campus. She was the only student to share the podium with Wellesley's president and dean of admissions.

She was elected vice-president of her alumnae class and was twice the president of the Phi Sigma Lecture Society.

BRIDGEWATER DEAN'S LIST

Joan and John Conte are proud to announce that Michael Kearney made the dean's list for the spring semester at Bridgewater State College! Good work, Michael, keep it up!

South Shore ARC receives highest DMR certification

The Quality Enhancement Division of the Massachusetts Department of Mental Retardation recently awarded South Shore ARC the highest level of certification an agency can receive. The "Two Year Certification with Distinction" is intended to serve as a benchmark for South Shore ARC's efforts on behalf of the individuals they support.

South Shore ARC is a private non-profit agency that serves people with developmental disabilities and their families. They are an approved IRS 501-c-3 charity, United Way affiliated, certified to provide Early Intervention by DPH and licensed by the DPH office for Child Care Services. South Shore ARC is DMR licensed and also members of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

"Since 1951 we have enjoyed having a good reputation on the South Shore, but this recent achievement highlights our strength in the areas of residential and employment supports," said David Calhoun, executive director. South Shore ARC also provides Day Habilitation, Early Intervention and Recreational and PCA services in the South Shore area from Milton to Scituate, including Norwell and Randolph.

An idea for yummy corn and peppers

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

There is no question that summertime is in full swing, just take a look at the produce — yummy corn, fresh, great-looking peppers, just to name a few — here is my idea for great corn and beefburgers you can cook inside, which is sometimes cooler than grilling!

Turn your fresh sweet corn into a succulent delight with spicy corn spread, serve with pepper patties, and you have a memorable meal!

Here we go!

SPICY CORN SPREAD

1/4 cup butter, softened
1/2 teaspoon dried parsley flakes
1/4 teaspoon chili powder
1/4 teaspoon salt
hot cooked corn on the cob

In a small bowl, combine the butter, parsley, chili powder and salt until smooth. Spread on hot ears of corn. Yield 4 servings.

PEPPER PATTIES

2 tablespoons soy sauce
1/4 teaspoon garlic powder
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 pound ground beef
1 teaspoon cooking oil
1 small onion, sliced
1 small green pepper, julienned
1 small sweet red pepper, julienned
Hot cooked noodles, optional

In a medium bowl, combine soy sauce, garlic powder and pepper; place 1 tablespoon in a large skillet and set aside. Add beef to remaining soy sauce mixture; mix well. Shape into four 1/2-inch-thick patties. Add oil to the skillet; heat on medium. Add onion and peppers; cook and stir for 3-4 minutes or until crisp-tender. Remove and set aside. Add patties to skillet; cook for 3 minutes on each side or until beef is no longer pink. Top patties with peppers and onion; heat through. Serve over noodles if desired. Yield: 4 servings.

Hopefully you will enjoy these two recipes, and that it will add a little to your summer menus — a little different from the norm, and oh-so-good!

EDITORIAL

Recycling starts at home

In Cohasset, they said it couldn't be done. So upset were some citizens here at the prospect of a thinly veiled "tax hike," that the pay-per-throw or buck-a-bag recycling program was thrown out along with the trash.

But just south of the border in Scituate, things have turned out quite differently. There, like good soldiers, citizens read the flyers explaining the program that were handed out at the town dump with some confusion but no threatened insurrection like Cohasset had.

The Scituate dump recently "closed" and a makeshift recycling, transfer facility is now in operation. Families were provided 50, 30-gallon (or 100, 15-gallon bags) with the purchase of a $50 dump sticker. Thirty-gallon replacement bags cost one dollar apiece.

After just two months of the new buck-a-bag system, the old dump isn't what it used to be. The line of cars waiting to throw trash away is almost gone even on the weekends. Instead, vehicles are in a queue at the recycling dumpsters.

In our household, the first week we stomped and stuffed as much as we could into our clear plastic bag marked with the 'Town of Scituate.'

Then as the weeks passed, we surprised ourselves at how much we could recycle. Newspapers, bottles, cans and plastics were a regular part of our recycling routine before buck-a-bag. But now, we're making the effort to recycle all our junk mail, cardboard and food packaging. Two weeks ago, we bought a home composting bin so now all our vegetable food scraps (paper towels and paper napkins can go in there, too) don't go into the trash.

Once a four bag-a-week family, we are now having trouble filling just one 30-gallon bag.

We discovered recycling doesn't have to be a bother. It's a challenge but can be fun, too. And in the long run, it keeps the cost of sending our trash away down and therefore saves tax money. But most importantly, recycling is good for the environment and that's something we all should care about.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Greenbush criticism off the mark

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is in response to the recent attacks on the people of Hingham and other towns along the Greenbush corridor who have issues with the restoration of this line. All of these letters offer no solution to any of the issues of concern and only insult and criticize. The only people to be criticized are those working on the Greenbush issue at the Statehouse and at the MBTA. These are the people who fail to address any questions or concerns raised.

Whether you are for or against the train, the only real solution is to demand that the state design and build this line under the same federal guidelines as the other two branches. If this line is really the same as the other two lines (as all of the pro-train advocates contend), then there should be no problem, right? Also, who ever heard of our state turning away (free) cash from the federal government? This is exactly what they are doing now by trying to construct the Greenbush line without federal guidelines.

Maybe all of the recent attackers could offer some constructive ideas and explain or locate anywhere in the country the conditions that are planned along the Greenbush line. The MBTA is talking about adding seven crossings in the less than one mile stretch through the center of town. An area filled with children and shoppers and less than eight feet from buildings. Not one or two, but seven! This is outrageous! Every state in this country is trying to reduce grade crossings for safety and the MBTA wants to add seven to the most densely populated section of Hingham. Another question I would like to have answered is how many acres of wetlands were filled to construct the other two lines? I doubt even a quarter of what is planned in Scituate and Cohasset.

And for all of the pro train people who are really auto lovers and are hoping they will be able to zip along Route 3A or Route 3 after the train is built, try commuting by auto from any town surrounding Boston (which I have tried). You will find gridlock on every route in the entire Boston areas. There is no difference! Only denser development and more people. Give me a break!

Residents throw money away with the trash

Reducing amount of trash a necessity

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

If you are looking for a way to keep your taxes from going up yet again in the coming years, the solution may be in your trash.

To keep taxes from rising, one of the most proactive steps that citizens can take is to simply reduce the sheer amount of trash that they produce each week and to recycle those items which are recyclable.

Hingham currently pays $70 per ton, including transportation, to send its trash to the American Ref-Fuel waste-to-energy plant, also known as "SEMASS." That price will steadily rise to $96 per ton by the end of the 15-year contract. Cohasset currently pays $88 per ton, and that price will rise similarly during the next decade.

"Waste-to-energy plants are being forced to comply with more stringent emissions requirements," said Claire Sullivan, solid waste planner for the South Shore Recycling Cooperative [SSRC], an organization of 13 member towns which negotiates and administers regional waste collection contracts. "These emissions requirements make it more expensive for the plant to run and those costs are transferred to the towns."

If the estimated generation of 7,500 tons of trash per year in Hingham remains steady, the town will pay more than $500,000 annually to dispose of its waste. In ten years, that cost will be $720,000.

Cohasset currently generates about 3,000 tons of trash per year and the town pays in excess of $250,000 to dispose of its trash. In five years, that cost will be over $300,000.

In both cases, if residents produce increasing amounts of trash, the cost to taxpayers will rise proportionately. To avoid increasing taxes, it will be necessary for people to make a concerted effort to produce less trash and to recycle.

"We have to educate residents that it might be only $25 per ton to dispose of recyclables rather than $70 per ton to get rid of trash," said Hingham DPW superintendent Joseph Stigliani. "There's only so much we can do at the transfer station as far as sorting people's trash to pick out the recyclables. It's in everyone's best interests for residents to be recycling."

"I tell people all the time to just do the three R's: reduce, reuse, and recycle," said Sullivan. "The savings in money and resources that can be realized by simply paying attention to what is disposed of can be significant."

In some cases, towns can make some money from selling recycled goods, but Stigliani said it's impossible to predict how much money to expect from recycling.

"We get $15 per ton for cardboard, but we were getting $200 per ton a couple of years ago," he said. "The market is always changing and it's hard to predict how it's going to change."

The SSRC is working to help save its member towns, which include Abington, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Plymouth, Rockland, Scituate, and Weymouth, additional money as well by negotiating waste disposal contracts with the added leverage that a 13-town cooperative brings

The SSRC's member towns pay an annual fee of $4,000 to belong to the organization, which recently negotiated an agreement with the Bourne Integrated Solid Waste Management Facility to dispose of construction and demolition waste at a rate 23 percent lower than Bourne's own gate fee.

Cohasset and Hingham have both signed on to the SSRC agreement with Bourne or are in the process of doing so, according to Sullivan. Member towns do not have to sign on to contracts negotiated by the SSRC, but often find a significant savings in doing so.

The SSRC also holds regional collections of hazardous household products, at which members of any of the 13 member towns can bring materials such as asbestos, pool chemicals, and pesticides for disposal. Residents should check with their own department of public works or board of health for information regarding the collections of hazardous household goods.

One type of hazardous waste which Sullivan said may be difficult to dispose of in the near future are catho ray tubes [CRT], which are found in computer monitors and televisions.

"CRTs are going to be banned from the waste stream in February," Sullivan said. "The reason is that there are 5-8 pounds of lead embedded behind the glass. With new computers becoming obsolete every 3-4 years and the advent of high definition television, there's going to be a huge volume of these things in the near future. These things are mighty expensive to recycle and I foresee a charge for CMT disposal in a couple of years."

Shown at the RTF, Claire Sullivan, solid waste planner with the South Shore Recycling Cooperative of which Cohasset is a member, says catho ray tubes (CRTs) found in computer and television monitors will be banned from the waste stream in February.

Disposing of CRTs might be an added waste disposal cost for families, but it would only be a minor cost compared to the savings which could be generated by the town from recycling and throwing less away.

Sullivan said that by paying attention to what they throw out each week, households can significantly lower the cost of transporting trash for the town.

"By keeping solid waste costs down, people are saving their neighbors money, because every taxpayer is paying for everyone else's trash," she said.

The rising costs of trash disposal have spurred 86 Massachusetts cities and towns, including Scituate, to treat trash as a utility and charge residents for each bag of trash which they generate.

The program, referred to as "Pay as You Throw" [PAYT], charges residents $1.00 for every 30-gallon bag of trash which they dispose.

Sullivan said the program is working well in Scituate and has been successful in towns with similar waste disposal needs as Cohasset.

"It's very early in the game in Scituate, but I know there's already been a significant increase in recycling," she said. "People aren't grumbling very much and I think it's opened some people's eyes about how much they used to throw away unnecessarily."

According to Sullivan, the town of Needham has solid waste disposal needs like those in Cohasset and Hingham, and PAYT has worked well there.

"As a result, Needham sends about 30 percent less trash to the Milbury incinerator from its transfer station," she said. "It now recycles 58 percent of its solid waste at a cost far less than that of disposal. And the widow who generates a half barrel of trash a week and recycles what she can doesn't subsidize the family of six that sets out several barrels and uses their recycling bin as a toy chest."

Cohasset selectman Merle Brown is a strong proponent of bringing PAYT to his town, but said that he would like to have public support for such a measure, which was not in evidence when the proposal was brought to Town Meeting.

"I'd still like to do Pay as You Throw, but it's going to take a little time to convince people," he said. "We [the selectmen] could have just instituted it without public input, but we did that as a courtesy to the town. People have to know that the state is coming down on towns to improve recycling, and there are a lot of people who have no regard for what they throw away."

Stigliani said that he feels that PAYT would not be feasible in Hingham because it would be difficult to police.

"From a practical standpoint, you have to have a means of checking that people are using the right bags," he said. "That works well with curbside pickup, because if people aren't putting out the right bags, then the town just doesn't collect them. "Pay as You Throw would be very difficult to manage with a transfer station like ours, which is congested now and would be even more so if we had to check people's bags as they unloaded them out of their cars."

Stigliani said that the most important step that citizens of Hingham could take to curb trash disposal costs is to recycle as much as possible.

"The state is really pushing recycling and wants everyone to be recycling 46 percent of its trash by 2000," he said.

How to control the cost of Cohasset's trash—compost

By Claire L. Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The town dump is joining the drive-in movie as a relic of a bygone era. As the quantity of materials we throw out has increased steadily, the landfill space in which to put them is declining sharply. The municipal landfill in Cohasset, as well as those in Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Pembroke, Plymouth, Scituate, Weymouth and across the state have closed or been ordered to close. The reason is that they threaten to contaminate groundwater resources. This leaves towns like Cohasset with a few expensive options for disposal. Several of the thirteen municipal members of the South Shore Recycling Cooperative are facing this challenge.

Cohasset's trash now goes to the waste-to-energy plant American Ref-Fuel, also known as "SEMASS," at a cost of $88/ton. That price will rise sharply over the next few years as the facility is forced to comply with ever more stringent emissions requirements. If the current generation of about 3,000 tons of trash per year remains steady, the town will pay more than $250,000 this year to dispose of its waste. In five years that cost will be more than $300,000. If residents produce increasing amounts of trash, the cost to the taxpayers will rise proportionately.

HOW TO CONTROL COST OF WASTE

The answer is simple: dispose of less, recycle and compost more. Or "reduce, reuse and recycle." The cost of recycling is vastly lower than that of incineration and is even profitable at times. The cost of composting at Cohasset's facility is low and is even less if residents do it themselves. Some simple and practical ways to reduce your household's waste are as follows.

1. Think before you buy. Avoid purchasing unnecessary or overpackaged products or items in packaging which cannot be recycled. Packaging waste accounts for more than a third of the waste stream. Examples of products with excessive or non-recyclable packaging are single-serve products (especially snacks and drinks), juice boxes and items in molded plastic blister packs.

2. Compost. Leaf and yard waste accounts for nearly 20 percent of the waste stream, is banned from disposal by state mandate, and is accepted at the transfer station for composting. Grass clippings can even be left on the lawn to nourish the new grass. Compost bins are available at $20 each, about half retail price, through the Cohasset DPW. If you set up a compost bin in the backyard, you can also compost any other plant or vegetable product such as potato peels, corn husks and watermelon rinds, leftover rice, dead flowers, hamster bedding, shredded paper, paper egg crates, egg shells, fireplace ashes, and cellulose sponges. Food waste can be stored in the freezer until it goes in the heap. Aside from egg shells, meat and animal products should not be added. The product is a rich, dark humus that is a preferable substitute to store-bought fertilizer. Basic guidelines must be followed, but it is not rocket science.

3. Recycle everything that can be recycled, unless it can be reused. (SEMASS is also prohibited by state mandate from accepting loads with recyclable materials.)

4. Reuse your grocery bags and/or use canvas bags. A paper bag nested in a plastic shopping bag can survive at least ten shopping trips. Recycle all plastic bags, including bread and frozen vegetable-type bags, at the grocery store or dry cleaners. Refuse bags for small purchases. Use paper bags to collect your paper for recycling.

5. Buy concentrated or powdered drinks and add water at home. Buy single-serve drinks in aluminum cans rather than plastic or glass (it's the easiest to recycle). Refill plastic water bottles and refrigerate. (See if anyone can tell the difference.)

6. Buy items in the largest quantities practical. The product-to-package ratio is higher, produces less waste and costs less (if you can actually use what you bought, of course!)

7. Substitute sponges and rags for paper towels. Your dishwasher will sterilize your sponge, and rags can be washed. If you must use paper towels, compost them.

8. Send unwanted catalog order forms back saying, "Please remove me from your mailing list."

9. Help improve the markets for your recycled waste by buying recycled products. Cardboard, steel and aluminum products are sure bets for having recycled content, and other products may indicate that they do. If you don't see recycled products, ask for them.

Considering that the average American discards more than half a ton of materials each year, the savings in money and resources that can be realized by simply paying attention to what is disposed and how can be significant. The time has come when throwing out more than a barrel of trash a week is socially unacceptable and fiscally irresponsible.

First year in the books

Library director looks forward to new chapters

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Library director Janet Husband celebrated her one -year anniversary as the town's librarian-in-chief on July 1, and she is bookish on the future prospects for the town library.

"I think that once we get our new library at the old Osgood school, the library will be a social gathering place in Cohasset. It will be the place to be in Cohasset."

Despite Husband's considerable enthusiasm for the project, the use of the old Osgood school as the town library is not yet a foregone conclusion. Should a library construction grant be awarded to Cohasset in May 2000, trustees would have to go before town meeting, where approval would be needed for the use of the old Osgood school as the town library and for the balance of the funding necessary to complete the project, which should be about $1 million.

"There has been no formal commitment for the use or construction of the old Osgood school as the new town library," said Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees.

A special town meeting did appropriate $152,000 for library construction drawings in October 1998, and Towle said she feels the library trustees will be able to make a convincing argument to the town once again if they get the construction grant.

"I think we'll be able to separate ourselves from the schools and all the other groups in town which go before town meeting," she said. "We'll do our homework and let people know what they're going to get for the money. I think people will get a good feeling and see that the new library won't be hugely expensive."

For her part, Husband is excited about what the site would offer the town as a library.

"Not all schools will convert into good libraries, but the Osgood is perfect," she said. "With its high ceilings, large rooms, and gracious brick exterior, it's going to be really special."

Because the new library is at least a couple of years away, Husband has not shifted her focus from making the Paul Pratt library as great as it can possibly be. One area she has focused upon in her first year is acquiring audiobooks , which are part of an overall technology upgrade throughout the library.

"We've added audiobooks, and those have become really popular," she said. "Two MediaOne terminals for internet access have been added to the reference room, and we now have a word processor available for public use."

Janet Husband, director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, stands in front of the library's growing collection of audio books.

Husband said that in order to get the library construction grant from the state, she must submit a five-year plan for the library, which has kept her thinking about the future.

"We're thinking about what kind of things we can add, especially videos and music, which we just don't have space for at the Pratt library. By 2001, we'll be buying DVD's instead of videos."

Before coming to Cohasset, Husband served as director of the Rockland Memorial Library, and noticed at regional meetings that Cohasset would need a new library in the near future.

"I knew they'd have to have a bigger building," she said. "Space is the biggest problem facing the library, hands down. In order to be a modern, full-service library, we require a larger building and a larger parking lot."

Should the new library come to fruition, Husband has plans in mind for it to serve as a place to hold discussion groups, which now seem to be reserved for people staring at computer screens and typing their responses, avoiding any kind of human contact.

"I'm planning book discussion groups, investment groups, that kind of thing," she said. "I think groups like that would help to counter the isolation of the internet."

COHASSET SPORTS

Litchfield wrestling with success for Orange Crush

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

All he did was attend one workout and Cohasset's Brian Litchfield knew wrestling was the sport for him.

Now, two years later, the 14-year-old Litchfield is already raising eyebrows as a member of the Orange Crush Wrestling Club, the biggest club of its kind in New England.

Earlier this summer Litchfield was named to the state's Eighth-Grade Elite Select All-Star team. Being named to the team was a thrill in itself for Litchfield, but the best was yet to come.

Wrestling in a tight meet against the Connecticut club at Worcester Poly-Tech in June, Litchfield pinned his opponent in the Greco-Roman division to win his second match, but more importantly it clinched a 60-59 victory for Massachusetts.

What made the win even more impressive was the fact that Litchfield moved up two full weight classes to wrestle in the 170-pound division and still bulled his way to victory over a larger opponent.

The commanding win marked a spectacular meet for Litchfield, who finished unbeaten in two matches after defeating his first opponent in the Freestyle division.

"It was a pretty big meet for me," said Litchfield, who will be eligible to compete for the Cohasset High varsity wrestling team this winter.

Orange Crush coach Mike Kenney said Litchfield is clearly the No. 1 eighth grader in the state at 140 to 150 pounds, and a coach's dream as far as Kenney is concerned.

"He's a real tough, tenacious kid on the mat," Kenney said. "Brian has no fears. his potential is unlimited from what I can see. He's ahead of where a lot of state champions were at his age."

What makes Litchfield all the more unique is, even at his young age, he already fully understands the amount of

From the front runners... to the back of the pack

View from the press truck just fine

TRACKSIDE

JOE REARDON

No way was I going to complain about the downpours that pelted the 9,000-plus runners in Sunday's 27th running of the Falmouth Road Race.

When you have an official pass giving you a spot on the press truck to view some of the best runners in the world battling it out over 7.1 miles of open roads, you don't complain about a few raindrops.

Driving on the flatbed trailer in front of the lead pack at Falmouth is road-racing's equivalent to front-row box seats at the World Series. And it even beats watching the race on ESPN.

But for a brief moment, I almost considered not riding on the press truck. The rain was coming down harder than I have ever seen it on Cape Cod. It was 8 a.m. and the cluster of reporters and photographers began to gather in front of a plumbing business a quarter-mile away from the Gus Canty Recreation Center, the official road-race headquarters. We were supposed to meet up with the press truck at 8:15 a.m. There was no sign the sheets of rain were going to let up.

Rain doesn't dampen competitor's experience

By Barry McGurn
CORRESPONDENT

God, I love running in the rain. Always have. I love jogging through puddles, wiping the drips from my eyes, spurting the water from my mouth, all as my soaked shirt clings to me.

An example: Around 4 p.m. one sweltering Sunday afternoon last summer, I figured I'd go for a jog around 5:00. That was until the skies opened up about ten minutes later. I ran upstairs in my apartment, threw my sneakers on, stretched for about a minute and bolted out into the downpour.

So, you can imagine how I felt as I woke up around 6 a.m. Sunday morning for the 27th Falmouth Road Race. Well, tired first of all. But as I looked out of our Dennisport cottage window only to see a gray sky and raindrops, I knew this was going to be fun.

My brother, Mike, 29, cousin John, 28, and I, 26, (all somewhat accomplished high school track athletes - especially John, a hurdler - at Reading H.S. in the late '80s. We have resigned to run one road race a year in the late '90s) left our cottage at 6:30 a.m. to get a good spot at the Lawrence School in Falmouth, where the big yellow school buses would bring back the memories and carry us over to the start of the 7.1 mile race at Woods Hole.

When we arrived much was the same as previous years past. Water bottles. Gatorade. Portable restrooms. Men and women runners of all ages and sizes.

But there was one difference.

Everyone was wearing a trashbag. Everyone. The only question was what color. White or black? When told to look for a friend, I heard one woman ask, "What color trash bag is he wearing?"

At precisely 9:20 a.m. the steady rain turned into a hard downpour and the crowd erupted.

It was ridiculous. People knew it. It was funny at this point. Many people were packed under doorways, win-work it takes to be successful in the sport. Litchfield hasn't missed an Orange Crush practice in the two years he has been a member of the elite club.

Litchfield showed strong hints he was something special on the wrestling mats during his two years on the middle school team. He lost just two matches last winter and recorded 10 victories by pin for the second season in a row.

Despite what Litchfield has already accomplished in the sport, his goals are modest. He doesn't talk of sectional or state championships. Instead, Litchfield just wants to get better at his craft.

He considers himself a stronger upper-body wrestler and finds "shooting" — lunging for an opponents legs in an upright position — to be one of his weaknesses as a wrestler, but one he fully intends to improve on.

"I'm not that quick," Litchfield said, "but I'm getting it."

Justin Litchfield will move up and wrestle high school opponents next winter as a freshman.

As a freshman on head coach Torin Sweeney's high school team, Litchfield believes he'll be wrestling in the 135-pound division. He has learned a lot from both Kenney and middle school coach Deke Conklin and plans to use that knowledge on the mats as a Skipper grappler.

Litchfield credits much of his success from what both Conklin and Kenney taught him. He calls Conklin "an excellent coach" and the same holds true for Kenney, who wrestled for Clemson University during his collegiate years.

"He's a great coach," Litchfield said. "He'll take me over to the side if I have trouble and explain what I'm doing wrong."

For Litchfield, wrestling is a year-round sport. He works out with the Orange Crush club twice a week and is contemplating practicing at the weekly open workouts at Brockton High School.

Litchfield would eventually like to attend a college with a strong wrestling program, but for now he's content with concentrating on his technique in preparation for upcoming Orange Crush meets and the high school season.

"It's an all-year thing," Litchfield said, matter-of-factly. "It's non-stop. I can go out there and win at something I'm good at. I liked it when I first started and I went from there."

COLD CASH

A small fishing fleet has been sailing out of Scituate Harbor for centuries. With the seashore town's close proximity to Stellwagen Bank and its abundant sea life, the fishermen have enjoyed some profitable years. Today with the new regulations for the trawlers and the gillnetters, many of the boats lie idle at the town pier where their only function is as a tourist attraction. I have known many of the fishermen over the years and worked in their homes repairing the plumbing. They are as self-sufficient a group of individuals as lives on the planet. They spent their lives at sea away from the rest of us land lovers and learned to fend for themselves no matter what the weather or catastrophe. One of our customers was Rusty Cherfelt who lived in a modest home in town and worked on various boats over the years as a deckhand. His wife passed away and when he died, his niece who lived in the Midwest called us to make some plumbing repairs. She was coming East to sell the house. We met her one day at the property and began our work as she was cleaning out the house. She was emptying out the refrigerator, when we heard her cry out, "OH MY GOD!" She had opened a package wrapped in aluminum foil which was marked "FISH," and discovered instead a stack of HUNDRED DOLLAR BILLS! The cache totaled $55,000. I guess old Rusty didn't trust the banks. We spent the rest of the day looking for more treasure but we didn't find any.

Navy Lt. John Barton surveys the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, one of the last largest tracts of undeveloped land on the South Shore and proposed site of a mega-mall.

Mega mall set to rise from ashes of defunct Naval Air Station

By Christopher Szechenyi and Jeanne M. Rideout
STAFF WRITERS

Red and green buoys lie rotting under the sun, oozing lead paint into the earth and threatening groundwater below the largest tract of land on the South Shore that remains to be developed.

The decommissioned South Weymouth Naval Air Station – now a ghost town pockmarked by contamination – is slated to come alive again as a giant mall and entertainment complex that will rival Disneyland.

"Overall the mall will have a major positive effect," said Ron Zooleck, president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, which supports a plan by the Virginia-based Mills Corporation to build a mega mall on 200 acres of the base.

But the mall must overcome inadequate water supplies and congestion on Route 3. "These problems need to be resolved before, not after, they occur," John DeVillars of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's New England office said in a letter sent to the Navy this week.

When the mall rises like the city of Oz in three to four years, 30,000 to 50,000 more cars a day will travel on Route 3, which is already clogged with traffic, especially during rush hours.

And to get to the shopping mall, as well as an 18-hole golf course, senior housing complex and manufacturing center planned for the 1,450 acres, a new road connecting the development to Route 3 must also be built.

The exact route that connector road will take is the subject of debate, especially among Hingham residents whose houses may be plowed under to make way for the new route. A consultant hired by the state is scheduled to present alternatives and hold hearings on the road this September.

The Navy is also planning to present its final cleanup plans for the base in the fall, making it the most critical period since the base was decommissioned two years ago.

"All of the pieces are coming together," said James Wilson, chairman of the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation, the public agency in charge of developing the land located in Weymouth, Rockland and Abington.

A toxic legacy

The base cannot be developed until the Navy addresses its toxic legacy.

Among the most troublesome sites is the land where dozens of torpedo-shaped buoys rest against one another like an army of weary soldiers, squatting in the path of the proposed road that would lead to the mall complex.

Preliminary tests show water in the aquifer beneath the buoys may contain lead levels 100 times the acceptable amount, but further analyses will be done to determine the extent of the contamination.

What may be worse is what's in eight Superfund sites ringing the base. Those toxin-filled sites make some areas of the land as uninhabitable as the Moon.

The Navy is still assessing the dimension of the contamination and has only just begun the massive clean up. It has already spent $10 million.

Local leaders, scientists and Navy officials are confident, however, that the environmental hurdles can be overcome. The footprint of the mall doesn't fall on the contaminated areas, making it easier to build. And if all goes as expected, by the year 2002 or shortly thereafter, the huge development will begin to welcome visitors.

That may be an ambitious timetable, but momentum is building. The Tri-Town Authority has signed a letter of intent with the Mills Corporation to build a 1.5 million square foot mall.

A sign marks one of the eight superfund sites around the Naval Air Station.

The new mall will have more than 200 stores and at least 10 theme restaurants and entertainment centers — such as GameWorks, a virtual-reality videogame arcade created by Sega, DreamWorks, and Universal Studios.

"This is an entertainment complex, with a different kind of shopper," said Mills Corp. vice president of development Erick Collazo. "This is not going to look like any other mall."

A catastrophic effect or a bonanza?

The mall could be so massive, however, it may permanently alter the quiet streets and cozy atmosphere of the area. The plan has vocal detractors. "It's going to have a catastrophic effect on the character of our towns," said Mary Byram, a Weymouth resident.

"The Mills proposition will ruin Weymouth and the surrounding towns," said Paul J. Leary, longtime chairman of the Weymouth Board of Assessors, at one of many planning meetings last year. "This is the death knell of Weymouth as we know it."

The redevelopment authority and Mills haven't agreed on a price for the land, but they have engaged in numerous discussions and Mills appears to be a serious partner. With more than $1 billion in annual sales, the company has developed more than a dozen malls in 12 states, which attract about 18 million visitors a year. One mall, Sawgrass Mills, is touted by the company as "Florida's No. 2 tourist attraction behind Disney World."

And the development would equal a bonanza of money and jobs for the South Shore.

The mall alone will generate an estimated $169 million for the area economy during the next two decades. The mall's high-end stores and movie theaters with 30 screens will employ more than 4,000 full-time and part-time workers. Its construction alone will employ at least 5,000 at its peak, according to Millis' estimates.

The three towns around the development have already signed off on the plan, lured in part by the incredible windfalls each will reap. And the state Legislature has authorized spending as much as $25 million to build a four-lane road to connect Route 3 to the site. The federal government has pledged another $14.2 million for the new road.

State legislators and their colleagues in Congress are behind the plan and want the Navy to make the transition as soon as possible. Nobody wants the Mills Corporation to lose interest in the project, and its representatives have promised that they're here to stay.

"They obviously want it done sooner than later," said Wilson, a Weymouth attorney. "But there are no drop-dead dates. They are in for the long haul."

Before the development rises, local planners not only have to address the contamination, they have to tap a safe, plentiful source of water without draining the thirsty towns nearby.

The irony is that aquifer below the deteriorating Coast Guard buoys has the potential of quenching that thirst. Studies done in 1965 and 1966 show it may produce more than 500,000 gallons a day, making it a veritable geyser. A second possible aquifer on the base is also under investigation.

The planners also must quell homeowners' opposition to a new road that will forever change the peaceful nature of their neighborhood.

"How do you sit back and accept the noise and pollution of 30,000 vehicles replacing the sound of birds chirping in your backyard?," wrote Hingham resident Susan M. Kingston in a recent letter to a newspaper editor. "Would anyone want this in their backyard?"

A Navy fighter that stands as a memorial near the entrance to the S. Weymouth Naval Air Station may soon be a thing of the past.

An ambitious plan

Opened in 1943, the Naval Air Station became part of the landscape along the South Shore and eventually developed an uneasy peace with its neighbors. Commuters passed it on Route 3 without thinking twice.

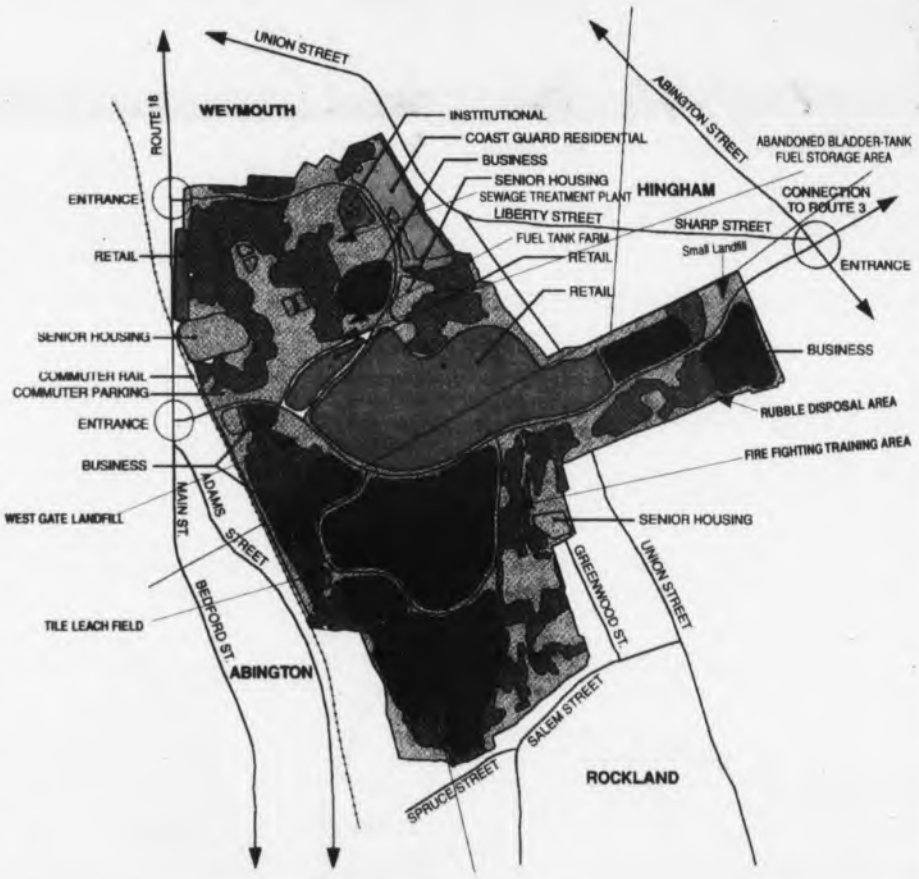
Summer residents of Cape Cod drove past Exit 15 without notice, amused now and then by a Navy jet overhead. And nearby residents accepted the noise and jet fumes in the name of national defense.

Before it was mothballed in 1997, a casualty of the end of the Cold War, the station was used as a base of operations for C-130 aircraft to carry cargo to U.S. troops in the Gulf War. And before that, during the Cold War, blimps from the base bombed German submarines when they surfaced for air.

Now the base is an empty shell, and the hangars, mess halls and barracks await the wrecking ball. Nearly 1,000 Navy personnel have left the area, sending a ripple through the local economy, costing the South Shore an estimated $60 million a year in lost wages and associated ex-

Superfund sites at a glance

There are eight sites on the base classified under the federal Superfund program. The Navy is addressing these sites under its Installation Restoration (IR) program. The following information is based on the draft Environmental Impact Statement prepared for the Navy by New York-based consulting firm TAMS.



- Site 1: West Gate Landfill: An unlined 3.5 acre landfill on the western edge of the property, near one of the two aquifers on the base. It was used from the 1940s until 1972 for burning and burying domestic waste. Due to insufficient information on the nature of the disposed materials, it was assumed that all types of waste went into the landfill during the period of use. Detected contaminants include pesticides, volatile organic compounds (VOCs), polyaromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs), and PCBs.
- Site 2: Rubble Disposal Area: an unlined 3.8 acre landfill along the western bank of the Old Swamp River, used as a disposal area from 1978 until the mid-1980s. Much of this disposal area was created from filling the low swampy area with building material and possibly transformers. PCBs have been detected.
- Site 3: Small landfill: a 34,700 sq. ft. unlined landfill located east of the Old Swamp River that received concrete rubble and tree stumps for a brief period of time ending in the mid-1980. Pesticides, PAHs, and one VOC have been detected.
- Site 4: Fire Fighting Training Area: a 3.8 acre on the southeastern edge of the base used from the mid 1950s through 1986. Activities were suspended between 1986 and 1988, and concrete burn pits were installed in 1988 for the continuation of fire-fighting exercises. Pesticides including DDT, one VOC, and SVOCs have been detected in surface soil samples. Petroleum-related VOCs, including benzene, and PAHs typical of fuels and used oil were detected.
- Site 5: Tile Leach Field: an abandoned 13,050 sq. ft. leach field located in the southwest part of the base along a drainage ditch that handled sanitary waste and possible battery acid waste from 1945 to 1956. No VOCs or PCBs and few pesticides have been detected, but elevated concentrations of lead and chromium were found.
- Site 6: Sewage Treatment Plant: an estimated 1,928 sq. ft. facility used from 1956 to 1978, when the base was connected to the municipal sewage system and the plant was dismantled. Pesticides including DDT and SVOCs and PAHs were detected in surface samples.
- Site 7: Abandoned Bladder Tank Fuel Storage Area: a 20,000 sq. ft. area northwest of Building 83 near what was formerly the southeastern edge of the swamp. Three fabric bladders were placed on the site to store aviation fuel for use in refueling jets on the taxiway immediately after landing so they could return to air without moving to the hanger apron, in a process commonly known as "hot refueling." The site was used for this purpose until 1987. SVOCs and PAHs have been detected in sediment samples.
- Site 8: Building 81: a former vehicle maintenance garage where floating waste oil has been detected on groundwater and residual contamination has been detected in soil, sediment, and groundwater samples. A pool of contaminants is suspected under the site.

Route 3 connector to mall faces roadblocks penditures.

But if all goes well, the new mall would more than make up for the loss.

During the next 20 years, the towns will proportionately share the $169 million windfall, as well as other economic benefits such as the opportunity for existing businesses to provide goods and services to the Mills facility. The three towns will also share in a portion of the sales tax revenue paid to the state.

"By law, we are not permitted to financially encumber the three towns," Wilson said. "We anticipate being a positive source of revenues for each of the towns."

The plan approved by all three towns is ambitious. It envisions devoting 174 acres to offices and manufacturing firms, 240 acres to retail shops, 35 acres for senior housing, 190 acres for a golf course, and 758 acres for open space, parks, wetlands and bike trails.

The local redevelopment authority will pay for new roads, sewers and other infrastructure through the sale of the land after it's conveyed by the Navy.

How will the development affect other businesses in the area, such as the South Shore Plaza in Braintree? More traffic in the area means more business for them, too, according to officials from the Mills Corporation.

Nobody knows for sure whether all the surrounding businesses will survive. No studies have been done on the local impact, but other Mills malls have not had a negative effect on nearby malls in their location, according to development vice president Collazo.

"Mill Corporation has come into 11 different states and a marginal number of businesses have been hurt," said Zooleck, the chamber president.

The new mall would be filled with shops – like Off Rodeo Drive, Virgin Records, and the American Wilderness Experience – that aren't offered in Braintree's South Shore Plaza. Some planners believe the new mall will attract new businesses to the area, but others fear that the market is saturated with malls and factory outlets that have sprung up in Cape Cod, Worcester and Fall River.

Nevertheless, the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation has been scrambling to put the ambitious development plan into effect. The five-member voluntary board of the corporation has met once every three days since it was created by an act of the Legislature last September.

Simply put, redeveloping the land is a daunting task.

"We negotiated with the Mills Corporation for two days last week," Wilson said. "They're very interested in making sure the land is clean."

Betty Gibbons and her daughters Jenna, 3, and Jaclyn, 5, worry about a road that may wipe out their house on Deerfield Road in Hingham. The road would connect Route 3 to a mega-mall at the Air Station site.

The controversial connector road

The plan also is predicated on building a major roadway that would bisect the former naval air base by tying Route 18 and Route 3 by means of a controversial connector road.

Visitors would access the new development from three points. First, the existing driveway at the main entrance to the decommissioned base located on Route 18; second, an entrance at Trotter Road may be expanded and serve as the primary entrance from Route 18; third, a Route 3 connector would provide direct access from the surrounding area.

Some studies suggest a road that links Route 3 and Route 18 would have a positive effect on local and regional traffic patterns. The so called "connector" road, which would take two to four years to build, also would provide access between Route 3 and the new commuter rail station near Route 18.

But Route 3 is already overburdened by traffic. And lately some South Hingham residents in the Farm Hills neighborhood have raised concerns about noise, air pollution and the loss of their homes that could result from construction of the connector road through their property.

Hingham won't get any tax revenue from the development in Weymouth, Abington and Rockland. Yet Hingham residents would largely suffer from increased traffic.

"Our home could be taken by eminent domain, or it could end up surrounded by barriers to protect it," said Betty Gibbons, who lives in a four-bedroom house on Deerfield Road. "Then it would be like living in a fort. Either way, it's not a pretty picture."

With new houses in the area surpassing $500,000 each, Gibbons and her husband, Jim, might be forced to move out of town. The couple wanted to raise their two children on the one-acre lot they bought five years ago.

"We worship here, make donations to local causes, pay taxes and our daughter is in the school system. We could lose everything we worked so hard for," Mrs. Gibbons said.

Five hundred Hingham residents have signed a petition to express their opposition to the road. But some Hingham officials view the road as a potential asset because it would open industrial land to development.

To study alternatives that may have less impact, the state highway department has hired a consultant, Wilbur Smith Associates, which will present its recommendations in Weymouth on Sept. 16, and later next month in Abington and Rockland.

The political muscle of the Hingham residents – who have so far successfully fought off the Greenbush rail line – may eventually force the connector road to wind through someone else's backyard.

However the issue is resolved, the mall development must wait for the state secretary of transportation to choose a path for the road, and then the state has to allocate the money – another critical step in the long process.

A two-year old consultant's report — which outlined five potential connector roads to the base — sits on a bookshelf in the development corporation's office on the base, collecting dust along with dozens of other environmental studies, zoning maps and

Who's who on Tri-Town Development board

Jim Lavin

James Lavin, a 25-year real estate broker and manager dealing in commercial real estate and condominiums as well as a CPA, is Abington's sole representative on the board. Lavin's background includes serving on Abington's finance committee for five years, including as chairman and vice chairman. Lavin, a gubernatorial appointment to the Naval Air Station Planning Committee (NASPC), is the only tri-town board member who was also a member of the original base redevelopment planning committee.

"After participating in the two and one-half year planning process, I wanted to be a part of carrying the project forward," Lavin said.

Lavin was chair of the NASPC leasing subcommittee.

John W. Rogers,

Longtime Rockland resident John W. Rogers is one of two Rockland's representatives on the board. Rogers is a lawyer and real estate broker who served on the board of selectmen for three years and on the board of directors of the Rockland Credit Union for a number of years, and past president of the chamber of commerce. "I was superintendent of schools in Rockland for 23 years with extensive experience in financing, negotiations, and building maintenance and renovations, as well as administration," Rogers said. Rogers is past president of the Rockland Chamber of Commerce, currently serving on the board of directors.

The newest member of the Tri-Town Board, Rogers replaces Rockland's original representative, town executive administrator Kevin R. Donovan, who resigned when elected to the Abington Board of Selectmen. Tri-Town Board of directors cannot hold elected office according to the organization's by-laws.

other reports.

The overflowing library illustrates the difficulty of giving a 1,400-acre military base a dramatic makeover. As U.S. Rep. Bill Delahunt recently said: "The process has been slow, tedious and expensive – for all parties."

Test wells measure contamination

The only sign of life on the air base now is a machine designed to drill a test well into the ground. It's one of the 44,000 test samples being taken to gauge how contaminated the Navy base remains and to determine how much it will take to make it healthy for human use again.

The Navy and its contractors are scrambling to fully assess the sites, so they can begin the tedious process of cleaning them up through a series of expensive decontamination steps and transfer ownership of the base to the Tri-Town Development Corporation.

Once the Navy has examined the results of its tests, it will propose a final cleanup plan, which has to be approved by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection.

The scope of the cleanup will vary from site to site, depending on whether it will be used for residential, commercial or industrial activity.

"It will take some work to reach consensus," said Dave Barney, one of the Navy's environmental scientists who is overseeing the project. "The Navy doesn't operate in a vacuum."

Sen. Edward Kennedy has been prodding the Navy to move as quickly as possible with its assessment. He has even sponsored legislation that would make it possible for the Navy to give the property, rather than sell it, to the local redevelopment authority.

But even if the sale were to occur tomorrow, contamination would remain a problem. The Superfund sites on the base stretch across 15 acres and contain several potentially cancer-causing substances, such as PCBs.

Environmentalists worry whether the substances have leached into any of the towns' drinking water. The base contains 400 acres of wetlands at the headwaters of two river systems: French's Stream, which flows south to the North River, and the Old Swamp River, which flows north to Whitman's Pond, a backup water supply for Weymouth.

A dozen families who live near the base in Rockland have reported suffering from cancer and 15 people in the same neighborhood have died from cancer. A preliminary study by the state Department of Environmental Health found slightly elevated levels of some types of cancer – far from a conclusive trend.

The residents aren't sure whether they played in contaminated water, whether they were affected by fuel dumped repeatedly overhead by jets coming in for a landing, or whether fumes from firefighter training on the base hurt them.

"It's still an unanswered question. It could be a couple of things," said Mary Parsons, a Rockland resident awaiting the results of a second cancer study, because she viewed the initial research as flawed.

A question of water

Whether the cancer cluster is linked to the base, one thing's for sure: in order to build a megamall, senior citizen housing and a golf course, a lot of water will be needed. The mall alone will require 250,00 gallons a day. The proposed golf course will require 300,000 gallons a day just to irrigate for three months a year – double the amount the Navy once used.

And the South Shore is already short of water supplies. Weymouth and Rockland/Abington face chronic water shortages. The problem is even worse this hot, dry summer. Even in wetter times, the mall complex will have to tap into one of the two aquifers beneath the base.

If anything holds up the redevelopment of the air base, experts say it could be lack of water. Water has become so coveted on the South Shore, it has become a resource dearly guarded like water out West. If the aquifer under the West Gate turns out to be a geyser, the question is who owns it?

"Nobody has the answer right now. Who owns the water is not known," said Marc J. Lawlor, an environmental scientist who worked on the Navy's environmental impact statement.

And Dave Barney, the Navy scientist said: "Water knows no political boundaries."

Mills on the move

The Mills Corporation has a dozen malls in nine states across the country. Customers are currently thronging to:

Potomac Mills, Washington, D.C.
Franklin Mills, Penn.
Sawgrass Mills, Florida
Gurnee Mills, Illinois
Ontario Mills, Los Angeles area, California
Grapevine Mills, Grapevine, Texas
Arizona Mills at Tempe
The Block at Orange, California

Slated for grand openings in 1999 are: Concord Mills, Charlotte N.C., Sept. 16; Katy Mills, Houston, Texas, Oct. 28. Currently under development are Candlestick Mills in San Francisco, and Meadowlands Mills in northern New Jersey and New York City.

Who's who on Tri-Town Development board

Robert Lundquist

Robert Lundquist, Weymouth's second representative of the board, is a project manage and lives in South Weymouth. As a member of the South Weymouth Neighborhood Association, he says he brings a "neighborhood perspective" to the board. Lundquist is an elected town meeting member, a nine-year member of the appropriation (finance) committee, and served two years on the capital budget committee.

"I feel I bring a solid knowledge of Weymouth government and the needs of the town to the board," Lundquist said.

Judy Killinger

Rockland's second representative on the tri-town board, Judy Killinger has been employed for twenty years in the Rockland school system. She currently is employed as a business manager in the superintendent of school's office. Killinger also served for many years on the town's charter commission.

James A. Wilson

James A. Wilson, a Weymouth attorney for taxation and banking, has served on that town's appropriation committee (finance committee) for seven years and is currently secretary. A Weymouth resident for 18 years, Wilson was also a member of the town's bylaw review committee for six years, beginning in 1987. As a lawyer, Wilson specializes in bankruptcy, which he describes as "making projects work, turning a business around to being a success."

"The five directors of the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation have been put in place to make the redevelopment of the naval air station a success," Wilson said.

The runners shed their trash bags and umbrellas for the start of the 27th Falmouth Road Race.

View from the press truck just fine for Falmouth race

Still, I wanted to see the race up close and personal. "Damn the rain," I said to myself. "Full speed ahead."

I made the right decision.

My first celebrity runner siting was the great Norwegian Grete Waitz. She was waiting for her ride to the starting line. The 1980 women's winner looked terrific. I thought to myself she could still probably finish in the top 10 if she were racing.

Once at the starting line in Woods Hole, it was a potpourri of world-class runners, local champions and thousands of novices. Several of the Kenyan stars pranced back and forth in their fluorescent rain suits. Eventual women's winner Catherine Ndereba of Kenya was chatting with a couple of her countrymen in Swahili, their native language.

Cohasset Road Race winner, Mel Gonsalves, who ran a great race last summer to take 35th at Falmouth had just begun his warm up. Three-time Olympian Craig Virgin jogged by on this, the 20th anniversary of his 1979 win.

Tommy Leonard the colorful bartender at the Quarterdeck Inn, was on hand, deep in lively conversation with a small group of runners who hung on his every word. It was Leonard who first came up with the idea of a summer race on the Cape back in 1973. Several "good luck" wishes went out to three-time winner Bill Rodgers as he jogged by, preparing to defend his 50-and-over title from a year ago.

I ran into former Braintree High standout Lori Johnson, whom I ran with during our high school years. Now living in Yarmouth, she is the mother of two young children. This was her first Falmouth, and it was hard for her to hide her enthusiasm. She looked fitter than ever and her toned arms and legs suggested she had spent some time in the weight room.

It was time to return to the press truck. Ten minutes later the gun sounded and the race was on.

A tight pack of 25 runners danced around puddles at the first mile to the statuesque Nobska Point Lighthouse. The clock read 4:37. The second mile was faster, 4:34. Two miles was reached in a quick 9:11 into a gale-like headwind. Under better conditions the leaders would have been a shade under nine minutes through the opening two miles.

Breaking out the notebook that was tucked safe and dry in my back pocket was out of the question. Anyone who has ever put a pen to wet paper in order to write down their thoughts knows why. There would be plenty of time to scribble notes after the race in the press tent.

What became obvious very early at Falmouth was that the favorites had no intention of running a slow, tactical race. It was, instead, a barnburner as a pack of Kenyans boxed in defending champion Khalid Khannouchi. It was at the five-mile mark, reached in 23:05, where Khannouchi broke free of the pack and began to make his big push to the finish line. Only Joseph Korir, second to Khannouchi in 1998, was able to stay with the fleet-footed Moroccan.

This time, though, there would be no sprint-finish victory by Khannouchi. Korir wound up having a slightly better race, edging him out in the stretch run to the finish to take first place, thus ending Khannouchi's bid to be the first male to win three consecutive Falmouth titles.

I hope to be on the starting line next year. If there's a downpour, I'll be complaining then.

Rain doesn't dampen competitor's experience

dows and trees. Others stood in the middle of it all, grinning. One runner sat in the street (one of the few people I actually saw sitting) and covered himself entirely in what appeared to be a clear, plastic tarp. Yet only five feet to his right a stream - that enveloped most sneakers entirely - had developed.

At about 9:30 a.m. (about a half-hour before the start) I ditched the trashbag. I was wet. And I wasn't getting any dryer by wearing this big, black bag over my body. The hole I had created for my head somehow had grown to almost shoulder width. Thus, the wet shirt underneath.

Then all the trashbags came off at once. As runners in the orange corral (the last corral to start) looked up the street at the next starting group they saw trashbags starting to fly. It looked like disgruntled baseball fans, discarding their souvenirs at Free Seat Cushion night at a major league ballpark. Except in reverse. And with trashbags.

It was raining. Then it was raining trashbags. It was non-stop. They were landing on roofs, streetsigns and trees. As if it wasn't enough every year for the race committee to pick up Power Bar wrappers, paper cups and orange slices, now, for the first time since 1979 (when many guessed it last rained this hard) they had to pick up something else. Thousands and thousands of trashbags.

As the last corral approached the starting line, four twentysomething women held hands, while one of them stomped, as hard as she could, the puddle she was standing in. What could anyone say? Stop? You're getting me wet?

The start was, shall we say, crowded. And slow.

Now, I do not anticipate running alongside these elite world-class runners from the other side of the earth at any point in this lifetime, but I'll admit that the orange number pinned to my t-shirt was a bit underrated.

Because I was one of many "orange runners" who ran up on the sides of the street and on to the grass to avoid the heavy people-traffic in the middle of the road.

I pounded through puddles (many up to my ankles), declined the kind offers of water on the side of the road (I had enough water rolling into my mouth), and pushed to catch the leaders. Or at least the next balding middle-aged man in front of me.

Memories of certain points in the race are foggy. And wet. I just kept pushing. And swimming. And trying to pass.

At one point, I looked down at my legs. They were frothing. I looked around at other runners. No one else's legs looked like the mouth of a rabid dog. What was this?

I caught up with Mike at around the five-mile mark (he had started in the corral before me). At that point I was swimming well, so I didn't have time to talk for long. "How you feeling?" I spit.

"Good," he emphatically spit back.

One more question.

"Mike, what's this?" I asked, pointing to my sudsy legs.

He laughed.

"Soap...from the wash. You gotta check that rinse cycle."

At this, I was off again. Off to catch the Kenyans.

Mike had more plausible expectations.

"Barry!" he yelled as I accelerated. "Go get John!"

I never did catch John. Next time I saw my cousin, he was standing, smiling, with his shirt off, in the muddy field.

He felt great, he said. Done better than he expected. So did I. So did Mike.

And so did John Korir.

"I like the rain," announced Kenya's Korir, the men's open division winner, to reporters afterwards.

That may be all John Korir and I have in common. I finished a cool 20 minutes behind the 23-year old.

John Korir finished in 32:06, edging two-time defending champion Khalid Khannouchi (Morocco) who finished in 32:08. I finished (unofficially) in 52:25.

John Korir won $10,000. Khalid Khannouchi won $5,000. I paid twenty bucks to get in. I didn't win anything.

Sorry. I can't comment on the FILA uniforms, the initial starting gun, or the Kenyans. I didn't see (or hear) any of those things.

I was about twenty minutes behind. But doing the same thing they were doing. Wiping the water from my eyes.

And loving it.

JUNIOR RACING RESULTS

Congdon Trophy

The annual Congdon Trophy for round-robin match racing in Cape Cod Mercuries was sailed in excellent race conditions on Aug. 2.

First place, Martha Henderson and Elisa Jerome; Second place, Owen McDonald and Julie Shea; Third place, Betsy Reynolds and Rachel McElroy.

Wasser Cup

In the summer long Wasser Cup racing series, the last two weeks have been very competitive with all the boats showing excellent racing skills and tactics.

Aug. 4—First place, Owen McDonald and Justin Runey; Second place, Martha Henderson and John DeWaal; Third place, Julie Shea and Jenny Daily; Tied, Betsy Reynolds and Rachel McElroy.

Aug. 11—First place, Owen McDonald and John DeWaal; Second place, Betsy Reynolds and Rachel McElroy; Third place, Laura Coenello and Jenny Daily.

Mate Racing

In the Mate I racing series the younger sailors are getting their first racing experience. According to racing coach Amy Logue, the teams are learning a lot, having "tons of fun" and show real promise for the coming years.

First place, Sam McDonald, Parker Berg, Chris Ofsthun; Tied, Michale Devlin, Patrick Horigan, Chris Reynolds; Second place, Michelle LeMaire, Lisa Musto, Cassie Rossano; Third place, Katie DeWaal, Jessica Wheelright, Caitlin Sanchez; Tied, Emilie Shea, Carrie and Christie Muir, Marisa Evans.

Team Racing

The CSC team of Owen McDonald, Martha Henderson, Eric Libby, Greg O'Connell, Julie Shea, John DeWaal, and Peter Maitland raced Club 420's in a MassBay South Shore Team Racing event last week in Hingham harbor.

In very tough racing conditions the team fell behind early but came back with some very close races with all of the competing teams.

First place, Hull Yacht Club; Second place, Hingham Yacht Club; Third place, Wessagusset Yacht Club; Fourth place, Cohasset Sailing Club.

Fourth annual Memorial Road Race

"Coby's Run," the fourth annual Memorial Road Race dedicated to Pvt. Coby M. Cutler, United States Marine Corps., will be held on Aug. 22. The courses start at the Gates School in Scituate Center and follow along the scenic Scituate coastline. The race includes a 10K, 5K, 5K walk and fun run.

Awards to the top three finishers of 10K race, 5K race and fun run, in each division including USMC division. T-shirts will go to the first 300 pre-registered entries.

Proceeds to benefit the Pvt. Coby M. Cutler Memorial Fitness Center at Scituate High School. There will be refreshments, raffles and a rock and roll warm-up to the fun run. Fee is $10 by Aug. 8, $12 thereafter.

Lack of rainfall has area farmers burned

By Cory Tromblee
STAFF WRITER

Farmers across the South Shore are in agreement: This summer is one of the driest they've ever experienced.

Record low rainfall in June on top of a general lack of snowfall last winter dried local farmers out and they're still trying to recover.

Bob Skilling of the Blue Hill Meteorological Observatory said despite suffering the driest June in 100 years, there technically isn't a drought in the area. To be considered a true drought, there has to consistently low monthly rainfall levels.

"Our readings don't show that there's been a deficiency [for the months of July and August]," said Skilling.

But local farmers will tell you a different story. They'll tell you Mother Nature dealt them a losing hand this year.

Kozhaya Nessralla of Penniman Hill Farm in Hingham said although it's not an official drought, the record lows of June were bad enough. The month provided no nourishment to the crops when they were just starting to grow.

"You gotta take your licks, I guess. Farming's like gambling," said Nessralla.

He said the overall effects of this year's weather have been absolutely devastating, noting that he and his brothers have been in business for 20 years and have never seen anything like it.

Nessralla added, "1978 was bad, but this is worse."

Not only did he and his brothers lose the entire first crop of the corn season, they don't expect the newer crops to be much better.

With only a trickling of rain throughout June, and normal rains for July, he said they have been forced to irrigate all summer. But even that's not very helpful, because water doesn't come out of a sprinkler quickly enough.

And when the crops suffer, so do the sales. Farmers are aware that what results is a lot of turned-off customers. Americans don't like damaged goods.

Roland Cretinon of Cretinon Farms in Kingston said thirsty plants don't develop correctly. And when that happens, he notes, "A lot of stuff gets malformed and they [the consumers] won't touch it."

Other farmers complain that business is down in general. Whatever their reasons, most of the farmers suffered huge losses this summer. Irreparable losses. Many of them will now have to seek help getting their feet back on the ground for next year's season.

Knowing this, the government is already preparing.

The state executive director of the Massachusetts Farm Service Agency, Charlie Costa, said the federal government will give help once Massachusetts asks for it.

"As of yet, we do not have a disaster declaration for Massachusetts. But I'm pretty confident that we won't have any problem getting one," said Costa.

Costa said he sent a letter to state commissioner of agriculture Jay Healy who will in turn contact Gov. Paul Cellucci. The governor will then have to contact U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Goodman, who can officially declare it a "disaster."

"It shouldn't take that long, really," said Costa, "I think they're almost expecting it."

Costa said when it does go through, farmers will be entitled to low-interest loans (if they can prove they've suffered a 30 percent loss in revenues) and possibly even grants.

Despite the conditions, Alix White of Cohasset said she only lost about eight squash plants. She attributes her low losses to an organic method: composting.

Costa said low interest loans are fine, but many farmers are saying, "We already have loans and we have to pay them."

But some farmers are still skeptical

Cretinon said that often the loans aren't even worth the work of applying.

"Sometimes it's not even worth bothering with, you know how the government works," he said.

He added that if the region endures another summer like this one, he wouldn't be surprised if many farmers go under.

"You can only take a beating so long and then you finally quit," he said.

Alix White of White Cedar Farm in Cohasset said she has felt the same pressure.

White was one of the farmers who suffered minimally, but she doesn't think another year like this would be bearable.

"We need snow," she said plainly. Low snow levels were what struck the first blows against farmers this season, White said.

She said the water table has been extremely low all year, dropping to July levels during April.

Despite the conditions, White said she only lost about eight squash plants. She attributes her low losses to an organic method: composting.

Through the use of a moist blend of well-rotted manure and grass clippings as fertilizer, White has managed to get by. She says compost is known for holding in moisture better.

She admitted it has been a struggle, but said local farmers need to maintain a sense of importance. With soaring real estate market values across the country, she said American farming in general is becoming endangered.

"We need to keep these farmers on the land as much as we possibly can, or else our country won't be able to feed itself," she said.

Inmates to work for teens

"They'll be doing general carpentry, including working on the handicapped ramp and shed, floor work, and framing. Basically, anything that can be done."

McElroy said that inmates from the Braintree Alternative Center had worked on other town projects, and that that no violent criminals will be assigned to the teen center.

"The guards are like instructors, and the prisoners are people who are housed in low-security cells. Usually they're people who didn't pay alimony, things like that. Sometimes they're even skilled tradespeople."

Help for the teen center project has also appeared in the person of local architect Dick Grinnell, who worked with McElroy on the Lightkeepers Residence project.

Grinnell said that he would draw up a complete set of plans by the next committee meeting on Aug. 31, which will help the committee to pinpoint exactly which projects the inmates will work on and will quantify what materials will be needed for those projects.

While most of the focus of the committee had been on getting the teen center built, committee members Liz Bates and Jodi Butman ventured to the Weymouth teen center and were heartened at how successful the center was.

"They have pool tables, foosball, ping-pong, Sega, TV's, it was really something," Bates said. "They have a snack bar as well and the staff member was working that as well as keeping an eye on the place. They have three full time employees and there were 40 kids there, which they said was a slow day."

Weymouth, however, is a bigger town with a bigger budget. The three employees of their teen center are paid by the town and were transferred to the center from other posts.

Youth resource committee members desperately want a full-time staff member for the Cohasset teen center, but without assistance from the town, funding such a position will be nearly impossible.

"We're going to have a hard time filling that job," lamented Carbone. "The town has to make a commitment for it to happen."

McElroy said that the recent budget cutbacks in town will make it difficult for the town to appropriate money for a staff member.

"With the cutbacks, the selectmen went back to the core jobs that they'd filled for years," he said. "Look at the recreation department. Jack Worley is grossly understaffed. He's doing the work of two people, and he can't find even one part-time employee for $11 an hour."

A potential search for a staff member will occur in the future, however, and, for now, McElroy is excited about the progress that has been made on the teen center.

"We've done well with fundraising and the work of the prisoners is going to help us tremendously. We figure we're going to save $10,000 on labor costs and that's money we can put to other uses. We're really rolling along."

Future of marina expansion

cision final when it votes on the matter Sept. 7.

Trendowicz on advice of his attorney Donald Connors of Duxbury declined to comment until the vote is taken.

This is the next chapter in the marina expansion saga that has upset numerous residents on Parker Avenue and Border Street, who were worried about increased traffic, safety in the creek and impact on property values.

Trendowicz, who obtained the necessary permits from the Army Corps of Engineers, the state Department of Environmental Protection and the conservation commission, has nearly doubled the number of slips bringing the total number at the marina to 85.

The planning board has said the marina is not its turf and selectmen have held numerous meetings with angry abutters over the expansion. At one point, they set up powwows with Trendowicz to reach a compromise on the project but nevertheless, the expansion continued to move forward as planned.

At last week's meeting, the zoning board also decided it did not have any issues regarding the timeliness of the filing of the appeals. Trendowicz's attorney, Connors, had argued that the appellants had already had their turn at bat, so to speak because they did not meet filing deadlines on a prior appeal.

"There was great scrutiny given to creating this map. I don't think there was any error at all."

—Woody Chittick, zoning board of appeals

One of the project's most outspoken opponents, Russell Bonetti, 20 Parker Ave., and Michael Hurley both said while they feel vindicated by the zoning board's opinion they found the process frustrating.

"It was resolved because the Hurleys and Kilkuskies were willing to spend money out of their own pockets or abandon their rights.

"They were stonewalled by town officials who were supposed to be defending the town," he said. "I think that's a shame."

(In addition to the Hurleys, Theodore and Kathleen Kilkuskie, 126 Border St., appealed to the zoning board on the expansion. The Kilkuskies also raised issues relating to the docks and a marina shed that doesn't have the required setbacks under current zoning by-laws.)

Michael Hurley said everyone should have to abide by the rules, which should be enforced.

"I hope the selectmen have more backbone and make sure the zoning map which the town lives by is upheld," he said. Selectmen must agree to provide defense on any appeal launched by Trendowicz.

Zoning board member Barbara Power said the marina could apply for a variance and can keep operating during a court appeal of the zoning board decision.

Phone campaign for charity underway

Police Officer William Quigley, president of the Cohasset Police Association, said residents can expect phone calls soliciting tax-deductible donations for the non-profit organization. The telephone drive, being handled by All-Pro Productions, will be conducted for the next two weeks.

"The money will be used for scholarships for graduating seniors, to assist civic groups in town and other worthwhile causes," Quigley explained.

No calls will be made after dark, he said.

There will also be a baseball game at 1 p.m., Sept. 25 with the police association competing against former members of the New England Patriots at Beechwood Ball Park. There's no charge for admission.

"It's a family event," Quigley said.

"I'm on my way to making Cape Cod and the Islands the first SafeScience Community, and I'm getting a lot of support."

Cohasset looking at future of its schools

Study will look at the present and projected needs

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Town Manager Mark Haddad informed selectmen last week that the focus of the study which will examine renovations to Deer Hill and Cohasset High School will also look at the needs of those schools in the future.

"The study is looking at what grade alignments will be needed, what types of spaces we'll have to have and how to address the needs of our schools for the next 50 years," Haddad said.

The study is being conducted by Hingham architects Strekalovsky and Hoit, who were hired with a $70,000 contract by the town to do a feasibility study on renovations at Deer Hill and Cohasset High School as well as developing educational specifications [ed specs] necessary to be considered for state funding.

Selectman Merle Brown said he felt the scope of the study was overstepping its bounds.

"The intent was to look at the maintenance of both schools," Brown said. "We've gone off the track to fix up the schools. We should be looking at heating and fixing the walls, not going off on another course."

Haddad said that the future of the schools had to be taken into consideration to complete the ed specs, which have to be done to get state reimbursement for renovations.

"The intent of the project is still the same," he told Brown. "But in order to get state funding, we have to have the ed specs done."

Selectman Roseanne McMorris said that she felt that looking to the future is necessary when doing any type of school construction.

"If you're going to do work on the schools, it makes sense to take its future needs into consideration," she said.

Selectman Thomas Callahan assured that no concrete plans have been done yet, but agreed with McMorris that it makes sense to keep the future in mind.

"Nothing has been put into stone," he said, "but why just put a band aid on the problem?"

Haddad said that the town would be ready to ask for appropriations for the design phase of the project at the next town meeting in November and would have construction plans ready for the March 2000 town meeting.

"Actual construction should begin in Sept. 2000," he said.

Brown was dismayed that another school year would go by before construction began on Deer Hill and Cohasset High School.

"I think people in town should know that nothing will be done this year," he said.

HMS Rose returns to Hingham Shipyard

The "HMS" Rose, a magnificent, revolutionary war, tall ship will return to Hingham Shipyard Aug. 24 to 28.

Sponsored by Sea Chain Marine, the "HMS" Rose will be open for a public tour on Saturday, Aug. 28 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The "HMS" Rose crew will be on board to answer questions about the ship and the history she represents. Representatives from the International Knot Tying Society have been invited to demonstrate their art. A small fee of $2 per adult will be charged with the proceeds being donated to The Hingham Food Pantry.

The "HMS" Rose will host day sails for Hingham, Cohasset, Weymouth, and Boston middle school students on Aug. 25, 26, and 27. Any middle school student interested in participating on these four-hour day sails should contact Sea Chain Marine at (781) 749-2222.

Any middle school student interested in participating on these four-hour day sails should contact Sea Chain Marine at (781) 749-2222.

During the evenings of the ship's visit, The South Shore Chamber of Commerce, The Medical Foundation, Southeastern Massachusetts Vision 2020 Task Force, and the South Shore Health and Educational Foundation will utilize the "HMS" Rose for networking and fund raising events.

The "HMS" Rose is a replica of a mid-18th century Royal Naval frigate. The original "HMS" Rose was built in Hull, England in 1757 to fight in the Seven Years War. The ship was responsible for patrolling the coast and operating as a scout ship for the fleet.

Reenactment of Coolidge visit slated

Actor Jim Cooke will portray President Calvin Coolidge at the 75th Anniversary of the 57-bell Cohasset Carillon at St. Stephen's Church on Cohasset Common.

At 6 p.m., Saturday, Aug. 28, carillonneur Sally Slade Warner and assistant Mary Kennedy will give a recital of music from the 1920s. The year of the carillon's dedication was 1924 and the hit song was "I'll See You in My Dreams." Calvin Coolidge was elected president under the popular slogan, "Coolidge without chaos."

Sunday, Aug. 29, Actor Jim Cooke, portraying President Calvin Coolidge, will re-enact his August 1925 visit to Cohasset. Arriving by antique car at 5 p.m., Cooke will give a half hour address by the president marked with reminiscences and humor. A clambake for 100 will be held at 4:30 p.m. Tickets (donation $20) may be purchased at the Sunday recitals or from St. Stephen's Church office, 16 Highland Ave.The carillon recital will be given at 6 p.m. by Milford Myhre from the Bok Singing Tower of Lake Wales, Fla. Recalling a few early Cohasset place names

LOOKING BACK

DAVID WADSWORTH
CURATOR, COHASSET HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The 1670 Surveyor's Plat of the Land Division of the Conahasset uplands, made by Lieut. Joshua Fisher for Hingham landowners, shows some intriguing place or location names jotted here and there on the map; sometimes with little if any indication why those particular names were thought of, and used. A few of those early names survive in usage today, and one may only surmise the reason they were used in the beginning. "Breaden Cheese Tree," near today's Lambert's Lane, is one of those, and one may suppose that it marked a particular tree beneath which Lieut. Fisher paused to have his lunch. In the case of "Supper Island," a point of upland intruding into the marshes of the Gulf east of Black Horse Lane, reason would dictate this name also is explanatory, marking a late-in-the-day stopping place. If these were the actual reasons for some of the unique names found on Fisher's 1670 plat, then one might guess that the Lieut., like the proverbial Army, may have tended toward "traveling on his stomach;" in the Colonial version of "brown-bagging it," all the while keeping an eye open for a good place to stop and grab a quick bite. An additional unusual place name not appearing on the Fisher plat but in traditional use is that of "Pye Corner," a triangular slice of land at the junction of Jerusalem Road and today's Red Gate Lane. Could it once have been an archaic stopping place for a quick slice of home-made dessert?

In the case of "Supper Island," a point of upland intruding into the marshes of the Gulf east of Black Horse Lane, reason would dictate this name also is explanatory, marking a late-in-the-day stopping place.

Among other place names appearing on the Fisher plat are some still in use, but not having culinary overtones; such as Gulf Island south of the Coye, Little Harbor and Strait's Pond, Lily (or Scituate) Pond, Jacob's Meadow and Peck's Meadow. The last two names appear to have been Hingham owners who had received earlier "Marsh and Meadow" grants from the Town of Hingham.

Fisher's plat shows the Conahasset uplands without that part of modern Cohasset extending along the southwest shores of Strait's Pond, along Hull Street, and the area today called "West Corner." That area was not part of the original 1670 Land Division; it remained undivided land until the later 6th Land Division of Hingham at Rocky Nook, a 1742 map of which appears in Bigelow's "Narrative History." Smith's Island, Side Hill and James Hill are shown at the boundary between the 2nd land Division at Conahasset and the land of the later 6th Division at Jerusalem or West Corner. And for reasons known perhaps only to Lieut. Fisher, a lone tree south of the Breaden Cheese Tree, on the boundary, is drawn in and named "Mapole."

Wanted: a slice of histor

Trees indicate their age by the number of rings formed through their main trunk. An interesting commentary on Cohasset history would be found in the cross section of an old tree trunk, sliced fairly thin for ease of handling. If you are having a large tree cut down and could spare a slice of its trunk — a cross section not too thick — it could be interesting to date the tree by counting its rings. We have some proficient counters available to count. A large old tree might allow us to locate its growth ring for 1770; the year Cohasset was incorporated as a District or Town — or 1775, the beginning of the Revolution. If you obtain such a cross-section sample, please call the Cohasset Historical Society, 383-1434.

COUNTER OFFERINGS

The most popular choice for kitchen countertops remains plastic laminate, used alone or with a wood edge, followed by solid surfacing, granite, ceramic tile, wood and concrete. Any color can be added to the wet concrete, then poured for a seamless countertop. There is no rule, however, that says every countertop in the kitchen must look the same. The new trend involves mixing counter materials, allowing the tasks undetaken in a specific area to dictate the choice of countertop material. For instance, granite is ideal for pastry making in the baking area, while wood lends itself best to the food-preparation area. As for waterproof solid surfacing, it is best suited to the area around the sink where it may be combined with a solid-surfacing sink that guarantees easy cleanup. Taken together, this mix of materials makes for improved function and increased visual interest.

Add beauty to your life and value to your home by remodeling your kitchen. THE DESIGNING WOMAN remains on the forefront of interior design techniques and can provide you with detailed recommendations on how to improve cabinets, counters, flooring and lighting. Our services include creating a design plan, scheduling deliveries and coordinating the work of craftsmen. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: If you cannot afford to use granite throughout your kitchen, use it on a limited basis for an island countertop where it will serve as a dramatic focal point.

So why is it that Cohasset is in Norfolk County?

LOOKING BACK

DAVID WADSWORTH
CURATOR, COHASSET HISTORICAL SOCIETY

When one looks at a county map of the South Shore area, one is struck by the fact that Cohasset appears as an island of Norfolk County, cut off from the rest of the county by the adjacent towns of Hingham and Hull, in Plymouth County. This apparent anomaly in county boundaries often leads to questions about the reason for Cohasset's separation from the rest of Norfolk County. Why would the town exist as a non-contiguous part of that county, when geography would appear to dictate that it should be part of Plymouth County?

Another related question would be, why does Norfolk County ("North Folk") lie to the south of Suffolk County ("South Folk")? The reason, as one might well suspect, lies in the early history of colonies and counties in Massachusetts. For the answer to those historical stumpers, we look to early Colonial history, when counties, or shires, were first established at the Massachusetts Bay. The first counties were established by the General Court of the colony in 1643, and consisted of Essex, Norfolk, Middlesex and Suffolk. That first Norfolk County, further north than Suffolk, was absorbed by Essex County in 1679, thus eliminating the northern shire name. At that time the towns south of Boston were part of Suffolk County and bordered on the neighboring Plimouth Colony to the south.

By the mid 1700s Hingham and Cohasset's District Court was located at Roxbury. The towns petitioned for the forming of a new county, out of the southern and southwestern parts of Suffolk County, and in 1793 the new county was formed, with county seat at Dedham. It would carry the vacated shire name of Norfolk. Cohasset, Hingham and Hull were among the towns designated to be included in the new county. Prior to formation of the county in 1793, both Hingham and Hull asked to remain in Suffolk County, citing difficulty of land travel to the new county seat. Cohasset, by then a town in its own right, decided to accept membership in the new county and became a part of the new Norfolk County. (Though an obscure entry in town records indicates the existence of an unsuccessful, and apparently not popular, Cohasset petition dating from about 1796, asking for return to Suffolk County.) Neighbors Hingham and Hull remained, for the time, in Suffolk. Not long afterward both Hingham and Hull had second thoughts about remaining in the county that included the city areas, and in 1803 they moved to join the more rural Plymouth County instead. Thus it was Hingham and Hull who caused the anomaly that left Cohasset surrounded by Plymouth County. The southern boundary of Norfolk County today follows the ancient boundary between Massachusetts Bay and New Plimouth Colonies, called the "Patent Line." In Plymouth County only Hingham and Hull are north of that line.

Thus it was Hingham and Hull who caused the anomaly that left Cohasset surrounded by Plymouth County. The southern boundary of Norfolk County today follows the ancient boundary between Massachusetts Bay and New Plimouth Colonies, called the "Patent Line." In Plymouth County only Hingham and Hull are north of that line.

As the result of the realignment of counties in 1793, Cohasset deeds and probate records prior to that date are to be found at Suffolk County Registries in Boston. Only from 1793 are the town's land and probate records located at Dedham. Cohasset has provided at least one notable Norfolk County Commissioner since that time; John Quincy Adams Lothrop, who served at Dedham in 1893 to '94. Son of Caleb Lothrop (builder of the house on Summer Street now named for him), J.Q.A. Lothrop had been a distinguished public servant in the town government for many years before being elected to county office. He died in 1894. Since 1793 the town also has supplied numerous other county officials, including court officers and deputy sheriffs, assistant district attorneys and operations manager. From time to time some sentiment has been expressed to change Cohasset from Norfolk to Plymouth County, but today that seems not to be a particularly popular idea.

The present county line, following the ancient Colonial Patent Line, extends from near Rhode Island northeastward to a point called "Bound Rock," a few feet from Mordecai Lincoln's old mill building at North Scituate. From there it travels in a general north direction following the thread of the Conahasset River (sometimes called the "Gulf Stream") until bending northeast to cross Border Street and to meet the shore near Bailey's Creek at Cohasset Harbor. The original "Patent Line" between colonies dates from about 1640, but, several changes of that boundary have occurred in more recent time. Perhaps the most notable boundary change in the town's history, or at least the most prolonged boundary dispute, centered around ownership of a number of acres of salt marsh and meadow on the south side of Cohasset's harbor entrance. That dispute between Hingham and Scituate, over land called the "Three Score Acres," and dating from earliest Colonial days, finally was resolved in the latter 1800s, with the "Three Score Acres" being given to Scituate. For two centuries first Hingham, then Cohasset and Scituate debated about ownership of those acres of once-valuable salt-marsh, and both towns had been known to levy taxes on the same properties. Hingham's, then Cohasset's claim to the Three Score Acres was recognized for the better part of the two centuries, but by the latter 1800s the state's Great and General Court had resolved the issue in Scituate's (and Plymouth County's) favor. Other boundary changes include acquisition by Cohasset of a part of Border Street called "Scituate Neck" beyond the Mill Bridge in the early 1800s and, earlier, the return to Hingham of a section of Cohasset called "Rocky Nook" near Turkey Hill. At one time some residents of Beechwood petitioned for return of their part of Cohasset to Hingham, but that petition was not granted.

Science Center hosts annual corn festival

The South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell will hold its 23rd annual Corn Festival Saturday, Sept. 18, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The fall festival celebrates the natural and cultural heritage of New England, its food, crafts and traditions centered around the fall harvest. Admission to the festival is $3 for adults, $2 for children, and free for children under three years of age. There is a family maximum of $10. The festival will be held rain or shine.

The Corn Festival is the Science Center's main fall fundraiser, and all proceeds will benefit the Center's environmental educational programs. The center is located on Jacobs Lane, Norwell, just off Route 123 and one mile from the Route 3 interchange (exit 13). The center is open from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday. For more information, call (781) 659-2559.

OBITUARIES

Laurence J. Hoogeveen

Laurence J. Hoogeveen

Laurence J. Hoogeveen, 64, of Bowdoin, Maine, formerly of Cohasset, died Aug. 11 at Maine Medical Center, Portland, Maine, of complications following a stroke.

He was born in Boston, the son of Jacob and Jacobina (Kostelyk) Hoogeveen. He was a graduate of The Huntington School for Boys in Boston and Colby College in Waterville, Maine, Class of 1957. He was in the Army at Fort Dix, N.J., in the late 1950s, then was an insurance and real estate broker and later was a self-employed carpenter in Cohasset for many years. He enjoyed vegetable gardening, woodworking and reading.

He was the beloved husband of Dorothy Butman Hoogeveen of Bowdoin, Maine, father of Laurence E. Hoogeveen of Shaw Airforce Base, S.C., and daughter Julie Hoogeveen of Windsor, Maine. He also leaves a daughter-in-law, Crystal Williams Hoogeveen and grandson Brandon Laurence Hoogeveen and step-grandson Tyler Burch, also of Shaw AFB, S.C., and son-in-law Rodney Littlefield of Windsor, Maine; and brother Chester Hoogeveen of Scituate.

A memorial service will be held in Cohasset, Thursday, Sept. 2, at The Second Congregational Church at 2 p.m. Donations in Mr. Hoogeveen's memory may be made to Maine Wildlife Park, 56 Gamefarm Rd., Gray, Maine 04039.

Frances Hawes

Frances Dear Hawes, a decorative artist who lived most of her life on Massachusetts' South Shore and on Cape Cod, died early Saturday in a Connecticut nursing home after a long illness. She was 70 years old.

Before her illness, Mrs. Hawes created and ran a wholesale dried-flower-arranging and decorative-arts business in Falmouth, where she had lived since 1978. She had lived in Cohasset for more than 20 years before moving to Cape Cod with her husband, the late Oliver Snow Hawes III.

Mrs. Hawes was born in Bronxville, N.Y., in 1929. She grew up in Bronxville and Washington, Conn., the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Brock McGeorge Dear. She graduated from the Ethel Walker School in 1947 and attended Smith College.

She had three careers before launching her own business in 1990. She was a real estate agent for eight years, working for Jack Conway and Co. in Cohasset and the C.W. Jacoby Agency in Falmouth. She worked for 12 years between 1968 and 1981 as an administrative assistant at three college-preparatory schools in eastern Massachusetts — Thayer Academy in Braintree, Milton Academy in Milton and Tabor Academy in Marion. She spent 10 years at Milton, working in girls-school admissions and the development office.

Mrs. Hawes also spent four years, from 1981 to 1984, with radio station WCIB in Falmouth. For much of that time she was the station's continuity director, responsible for on-air advertising and copy writing.

Throughout her life, Mrs. Hawes wrote stories and poems for children, painted, gardened and made dried-flower arrangements. She turned her artistic skills into a career forming a decorative-arts business called Essence in 1990 and running it until 1995. In Falmouth, she was a member of the Falmouth Garden Club and St. Barnabas Church.

She was married to Mr. Hawes, a native of Fall River, from 1950 until his death in 1990.

She leaves a twin sister, Ann Dear Huntoon of Chappaqua, N.Y.; a brother, Brock McGeorge Dear of Pinehurst, N.C.; a daughter, Ann Hawes Nelson of Madison, Conn.; and a son, Peter Snow Hawes of Branford, Conn. She also leaves three grandchildren: Lauren Brunjes Hawes, Emily Elizabeth Nelson and Alexandra Dear Nelson.

A memorial service is scheduled for 2:30 p.m. Monday, July 12, at St. Barnabas Church in Falmouth. Mrs. Hawes asked that, in lieu of flowers, donations be made to The Connecticut Hospice, The Ethel Walker School, St. Barnabas Church, or to sympathizers' charities of choice.

Carl S. Sestito

Carl S. Sestito

Carl S. "Bumpy" Sestito, 90, founder and owner of Sestito Landscaping in Cohasset died Aug. 11 at his home in Cohasset after a brief illness.

Born and educated in Amoroni, Italy, he arrived at Ellis Island, N.Y., in January 1921. He settled in the Green Hills section of Hull and lived there for 17 years before moving to Cohasset in 1938.

He was a member of the Sons of Italy in Hingham and the Knights of Columbus.

Mr. Sestito leaves his wife, Mary Ann (Umbrianna) Sestito; a son, Anthony Sestito of Cohasset; a daughter, Rose M. Calvi of Hingham; nine grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated in St. Anthony's Church. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparell Funeral Home.

Minors arrested at Wolf Pit

Police arrested one adult and four minors following a complaint about a disturbance at about 10:30 p.m. Saturday night.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said the incident occurred at the "Wolf Pit," an area at the end of Beechwood Street by the Aaron River Reservoir, where youths like to congregate and drink illegally.

"They leave their cars, cause a disturbance and someone calls and then we respond and if we find any violations, we make arrests," said Jackson who explained parking is not allowed along Beechwood after dark. The youths were found in the woods with a 30 pack of a malt-type beverage, Jackson said.

Charged with minor transporting alcohol are: Bonnie L. Minard, 18, of 11 Wellesley Road, Scituate; Laura E. Stoddard, 17, of 63 Summer St., Cohasset; Denis P. Rooney, 18, of 60 Lantern Lane, Cohasset; and Elizabeth M. Ringler, 20, of 20 Riverview Place, Scituate. Jean E. Piers, 21, of 18 Chet Way, Scituate was charged with public drinking.

LAFLAMME ESTATE

LEGAL NOTICE
COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT DEPARTMENT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 94P0953A2
NOTICE OF FIDUCIARY'S ACCOUNT

To all persons interested in the estate of Velma LaFlamme late of Cohasset, in the county of Norfolk.

You are hereby notified pursuant to Mass. R.Civ.P. Rule 72 that the 1st, 2nd and final account(s) of Paul C. Gay as Administrator (the fiduciary) of said estate has been presented to said Court for allowance.

If you desire to preserve your right to file an objection to said account(s), you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before the eighth day of September, 1999, the return day of this citation. You may upon written request by registered or certified mail to the fiduciary, or to the attorney for the fiduciary, obtain without cost a copy of said account(s). If you desire to object to any item of said account(s), you must, in addition to filing a written appearance as aforesaid, file within thirty days after said return day or within such other time as the Court upon motion may order a written statement of each such item together with the grounds for each objection thereto, a copy to be served upon the fiduciary pursuant to Mass. R.Civ.P. Rule 5.

WITNESS, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham this 26th day of July, 1999.

LEGAL NOTICE
DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION
WATERWAYS REGULATION PROGRAM

Notice of License Application pursuant to G.L. Chapter 91
Waterways Application Number W99-9437

Notification Date: August 21, 1999

Public notice is hereby given of the application by the Town of Cohasset to construct and maintain a walkway, pier, gangway and floats, to repair existing riprap, place stone walls, and maintain an existing boat ramp at 40 Parker Avenue in the municipality of Cohasset in and over the waters of Bailey's Creek. The proposed use of the structures is to provide a public waterfront park and is a water-dependent project.

The Department will consider all written comments submitted within 30 days subsequent to the "Notification Date" in order to decide whether to grant authorization for the proposed activity pursuant to G.L. Chapter 91. A public hearing may be held upon request by the municipal official. Furthermore, a municipality, ten citizen group or any aggrieved person that has submitted written comments may also petition to intervene to become a party before the close of the comment period. Failure to submit such petition will result in the waiver of any right to an adjudicatory hearing. Further information regarding this application may be obtained by contacting the Division at (978) 661-7600. Plans and documents for this application are on file with the Department for public viewing at the address below. Written comments should be addressed to: J. Sprague, DEP/DWW, 205a Lowell St., Wilmington, MA 01887.

Finding some middle ground

Officials ponder need, value of middle school

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

For those students entering the seventh grade in Cohasset, the days leading up to the beginning of the new school year are filled with a certain amount of anxiety. Gone are the cozy confines of Deer Hill, and lurking instead is Cohasset Middle-High School, its social scene ruled by 17-year-old high school seniors.

All of this can be pretty intimidating for a 12-year-old whose adolescence has just begun. For this reason and others, school administrators are studying the viability of altering grade configurations throughout the school system. They would like to create a more separate middle school, which would include grades 6-8.

The reason that grade configurations are being studied now is that the school committee is planning to apply for state funding for renovations to Deer Hill and CMHS. The school district needs to finalize their future goals for both schools as part of the application for that funding.

According to projections done by Strekalovsky and Hoit, the Hingham architects hired to look into the renovation options at Deer Hill and CMHS, enrollment figures are expected to rise in the coming years. With the extra students comes the question of how to house them.

While the brand-new Osgood school is off the table as far as reno-

Firestorm of controversy

Haddad seeks to limit overtime in fire department

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Where does a town draw the line when it comes to the safety of its citizens? Town Manager Mark Haddad would like to know, as he feels that the overtime expenditures incurred by the fire department have become too costly.

The amount appropriated for overtime in the fire department for fiscal year 2000 was $128,602. As of Aug. 15, which is seven weeks into the fiscal year, $34,000 of that amount had already been spent. Haddad said he felt that the practice of call backs should be limited in order to reduce the overtime expenditures of the fire department.

Call backs occur when firefighters leave the station with the ambulance and off-duty firefighters are called in to take their places. Typically, there are four firefighters on duty at any given time. When an ambulance run is made, two of those four firefighters go in the ambulance, leaving two firefighters to man the station. When that happens, two off-duty firefighters are called in to the station, and they accrue a minimum of two hours of overtime pay for filling in.

"We've all expressed concern about the overtime. But you're not addressing the safety concern."
SELECTMAN ROSEANNE MCMORRIS TO TOWN MANAGER MARK HADDAD

"There's nothing saying that we have to have four firefighters on duty," Haddad said. "I'm coming close to saying that we shouldn't fill all shifts with four firefighters. I'm at my wit's end."

Selectman Roseanne McMorris expressed concern that limiting the number of firefighters during a

Technology advanced since last school year

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Eight new teachers and new computer labs at Cohasset Middle-High School are the primary changes that students will encounter as they return for yet another school year on Thursday, Sept. 2. The first day of school will be a full day for all students in Cohasset public schools, and Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey is excited for students to witness the changes that have been put in place this summer.

"We've been extremely busy this summer screening resumes and interviewing prospective employees as well as getting the new computers in," he said at the school committee meeting on Monday night. "We'll have 15 or 16 new employees, including eight new teachers. The personnel decisions are the most important choices that a school district makes and we've been very careful to make good decisions."

Two of the new teachers are filling positions which have just been created this year. One new fourth grade position was created at Deer Hill and a computer applications position was created at the middle school level.

The new computer applications class will be taught to seventh and School hours to stay the same

School hours at all Cohasset public schools will remain unchanged from 1998-99. School hours at Osgood will be from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., 8:25 to 2:25 at Deer Hill, and 7:20 to 2:06 at Cohasset Middle-High School.

Fall town meeting switched to December

This fall's Special Town Meeting has been switched from Nov. 15 to Monday, Dec. 6, because town moderator George Marlette was unavailable on the previously scheduled date.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that Nov. 8 would be too early for the Special Town Meeting because it wouldn't give groups in town enough time to prepare.

The meeting could not be held on Nov. 28 or 29 due to the Thanksgiving holiday, leaving Dec. 6 as the most viable option.

KEDS costing town benefit money

Lee Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Rd., notified selectmen at their Tuesday night meeting that the self-supporting day care program of Cohasset public schools is not entirely so. Jenkins claimed that the program, known as KEDS (Kindergarten Enriched Day) was costing the town $25,000 in benefit money that was not being reimbursed.

Selectman Roseanne McMorris said that an investigation should be done into the program's benefit structure.

"We need to have discussions about why it's not entirely self-supporting," she said.

New treasurer/ collector appointed

Joseph A. DeVito of Hanover has been hired as the town's new treasurer/collector, replacing the retiring Joe Buckley. DeVito previously served as assistant assessor in Cohasset from 1991-93, and was most recently the chairman of assessors in Watertown.

"Joe has the right personality and experience for the job," Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen at their Tuesday meeting. "I'm very comfortable with the appointment."

Selectman Merle Brown readily agreed with Haddad's assessment.

"I think his personality will work well in town hall," he said.

Lobster Lab to remain unpainted

Town Manager Mark Haddad has recommended to selectmen that the Lobster Lab on the Hagerty property not be painted at this time. Haddad met with Lobster Lab president Kevin Ulmer last week, at which time Ulmer explained that renovations to the exterior are to begin next spring.

Significant exterior work would be necessary to paint the building, and Haddad was convinced that it was an unnecessary step.

Smoke-free dining guide

A smoke-free dining guide for the South Shore has recently been published. This joint venture of local Massachusetts Tobacco Control Programs is a comprehensive listing of approximately 225 smoke-free eating establishments on the South Shore.

This guide will be available in locations throughout the communities of Abington, Braintree, Carver, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hanson, Hingham, Holbrook, Hull, Kingston, Marshfield, Middleboro, Milton, Norwell, Pembroke, Plymouth, Quincy, Rockland, Scituate, West Bridgewater, Weymouth and Whitman.

This dining guide would not have been possible without the generous donations of Milton Hospital and the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, Massachusetts Smoker's Quitline.

If you would like a copy of the smoke-free dining guide, call the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program at (781) 829-4301.

Open space board seeks members

The Open Space and Recreation Committee is looking for two members to help revise and update Cohasset's Open Space and Recreation plan, and also to help implement the open space and recreation goals outlined in the report. Anyone who is action-oriented, and wants to help improve Cohasset's open space and recreation opportunities, is welcome to apply. Call Debbie Cook, chairman, at 383-6313.

Back to school for canines

Good Manners For Beginners teaches all beginner level commands like sit, stay, come, down, drop it, don't touch, watch me and heel work. It also addresses basic behavior problems like jumping, mouthing, chewing and barking. Class starts Sept. 16 at 6 p.m. on the common.

Obedience With Distractions (level 2) assumes your dog understands basic commands but does not necessarily do them well. It focuses on getting your dog to listen to you in spite of sound, object, motion and doggie distractions with less and less leash control. Class starts Sept. 16 at 6 p.m. also on the common.

For more information, call the Recreation Center at (781) 383-4109 or (617) 789-3647.

Suffering at the hands of family members

Reports of elder abuse rising on South Shore

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

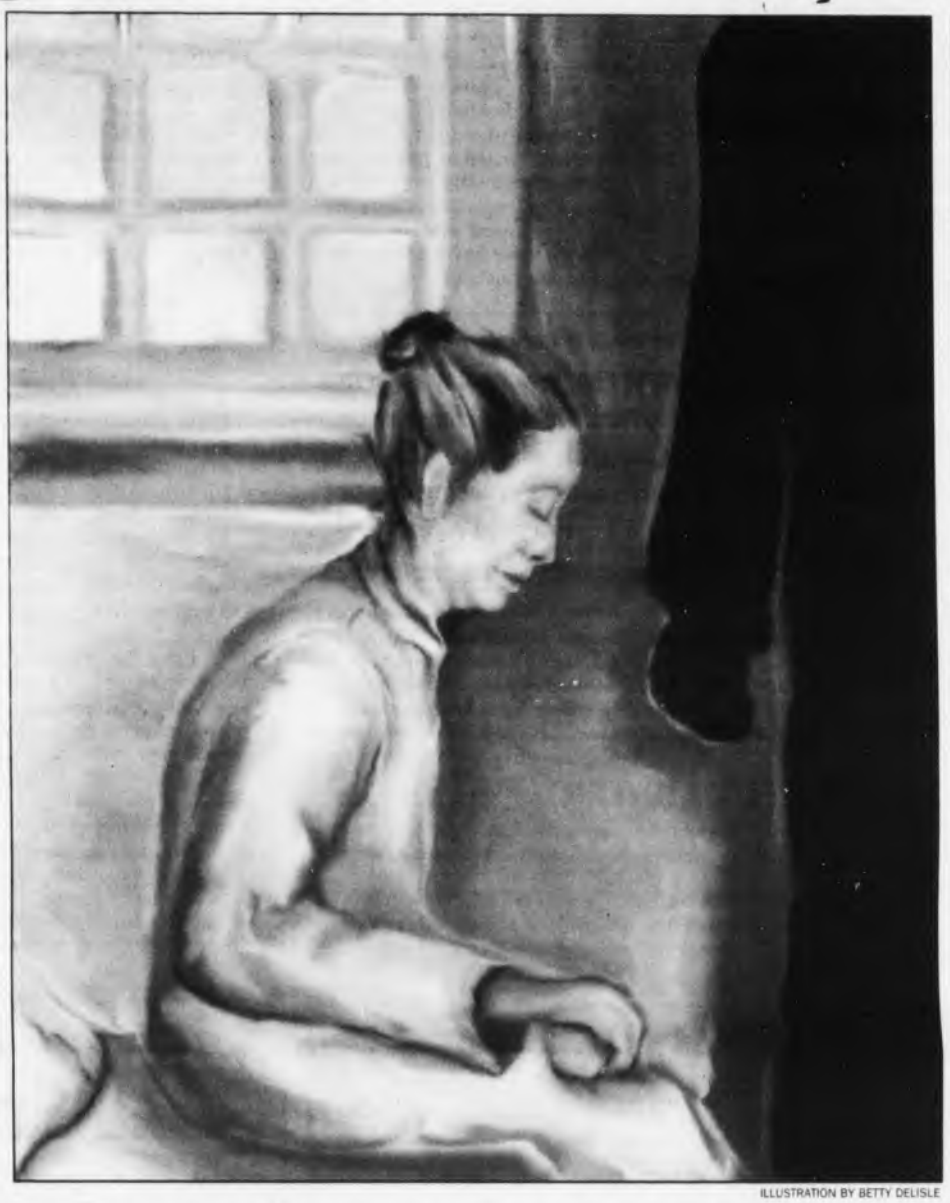

ILLUSTRATION BY BETTY DELISLE

Shortly after last Christmas, a 50-year-old Pembroke man was arrested for beating an 81-year-old woman so viciously that she almost died.

She suffered from multiple fractures, a collapsed lung, broken ribs, and severe bruising on her face, arms, and shins.

But this was no random attack or everyday robbery attempt.

The victim was the alleged assailant's mother.

The elderly woman remained in poor condition at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth for several weeks before being transferred to a long-term care facility. Meanwhile, her son's fate will be decided by a Brockton Superior courtroom, where his case was transferred from Plymouth because of its severity.

It is just one of many elder abuses incidents happening on the South Shore. Recent cases have brought to light a growing problem in the area as well as the nation.

In the affluent town of Cohasset, with its stately homes and pristine neighborhoods, a man got into a heated and brutal argument with his elderly mother.

According to Cohasset police Sgt. Robert Jackson, the argument escalated, and when the woman tried to flee, her son allegedly slammed the door of the home on her hand, severing two of her fingers.

"Her fingers have not been put back on," Jackson said grimly. "There had been previous restraining orders against this young man on several occasions. This was not an isolated incident."

Jackson said despite the details of the case, the man's mother did not press charges. But that's nothing unusual, say experts trained in the area of elder abuse cases.

According to Lillian Glickman, state Secretary of Elder Affairs, the number of incidents involving the emotional, neglectful, and physical elements of elderly abuse is only going up and not all of them are even reported to authorities.

"The recently-released Elder Protective Services Report shows that 1998 marked the 13th consecutive year in which the number of elder abuse reports increased in Massachusetts," Glickman said. "Other statistics are no less striking: From 1988-1998, reports of abuse increased 117 percent, from 2,769 to 6,010."

The report is a yearly document which is prepared by the Elder Affairs office in order to illustrate the status of elder abuse within the state. It also shows what programs are being implemented by state and town officials to control the epidemic.

"As the number of people over age 60 grows, we project a continued increase in the number of elder abuse reports in Massachusetts well into the 21st century," said Glickman.

The report reveals that nearly 31 percent of all abuse cases found in the state involve physical abuse. And what may be surprising to some is the perpetrator in a physical abuse case is often the child or grandchild of the elderly victim. In many of those cases, the victims will often hold back on pressing charges against their children.

"I do notice reporting problems when it involves a person's child," said Mary Willis, director of the Pembroke Council on Aging. "They love their children. If a child is abusing a parent, that's usually difficult to prove."

Adds Marshfield Council on Aging Director Carol Connolly, "Most of the time, a client won't report abuse if it involves a child."

Experts say the reason most do not report the incidents is because the victims are unwilling or too embarrassed to acknowledge that someone they love is abusing them. Other factors which discourage some elderly individuals from reporting abuse are "fear of retaliation [by a caretaker] or nursing home placement, the dependence of the victim on the perpetrator for their care needs, and the inability of some elders to report abuse due to mental and/or physical frailty," according to the state report.

Muriel Boyce, director of the Kingston Council on Aging, said she feels incidents involving all types of elderly abuse, not necessarily just physical abuse, are not reported enough. Other kinds of abuse include financial and/or emotional abuse, neglect, and even self-neglect cases.

"It's more underreported than rape is," she said. "Off the top of my head, I'd say about 80 percent of these incidents don't get reported. It's going on, but nobody talks about it."

State statistics support Boyce's claims. The report from elder affairs states, "The prevalence and incidence of domestic elder abuse are believed to be both underestimated and underreported."

Ed Flynn, director of South Shore Elder Services in Braintree, said he too has noticed the trend where elders who have been abused by their children choose not to report the given incidents.

"We run into that a lot," he said. "In terms of our investigations, if an elderly person is competent, and they don't want to press charges, we're limited in what we can do. It's very difficult for a parent to do that to their child. It has something to do with the overall urge to protect."

Flynn explained that South Shore Elder Services is one of the main protective service agencies in Massachusetts mandated not only to report instances of abuse to proper authorities, but also to investigate them.

Flynn noted that "big numbers" of abuse incidents are falling into the "neglect" category of abuse. Flynn described two neglect cases with which he has come into contact in the past.

The first concerned an elderly husband and wife who lived together on the South Shore. Flynn said the husband in the case had a habit of wandering due to a "dementia" condition. He said although the wife knew the husband's habit was a danger to himself, she was unable to stop him because he was much larger than her. Therefore, she was left with no choice other than to do nothing about it.

"By law," Flynn said, "that's neglect. It wasn't intentional, though, because it was beyond the wife's control."

Flynn said in that case, his agency intervened and tried to remedy the case with people who could have put the situation in check.

The second case of neglect he described involved an elderly mother being cared for by her daughter. The daughter, knowing very well that her mother was incapable of caring for herself, left the house one day to go about doing her daily routine. While the daughter was gone, a fire started, putting the elderly victim at great risk. Fortunately, Flynn said, the mother was rescued, but his agency was mandated to intervene in the situation to try to find some extra help for the daughter to assist in her mother's care. In addition, the mother needed to get "emergency placement" in a nursing home.

A Matter of Money

Flynn said whenever there are cutbacks in funding provided to the protective services organizations, instances of neglect increase.

"The state needs to adequately fund protective services," he said. "There just isn't enough money. With the numbers growing, the cases are getting more intense. We are seeing tougher situations, and we want to make sure we have enough staff."

Flynn said there is a large turnover rate within the protective services field, noting that the recently-passed House budget did provide protective services with the extra $1 million it was told it was going to get.

Rep. Tom O'Brien (D-Kingston) explained that for the Fiscal Year 2000 budget, Gov. Cellucci took $200 million — an amount he projected would come from a pending tobacco company settlement — and used it throughout the budget despite the fact that the $200 million was not technically available yet.

"That money shouldn't have been counted," O'Brien said, noting that the use of the funds "created false expectations." He added that the House of Representatives refused to incorporate the tobacco monies into its draft of the budget. Therefore, the original sum of $1.3 million was the

VFW chapters face uncertain future

Number of veterans dwindling yearly

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The motto of the Veterans of Foreign Wars is "We'd Do Anything For This Country," and the sacrifices made by veterans prove the motto's truth. However, as World War II and Korean War veterans get increasingly older, it may become more difficult for VFW chapters to maintain their viability.

The VFW celebrated its 100th anniversary last week in Kansas City, Missouri, but future anniversaries may be hard to come by as veterans grow older.

"I think it may be difficult for some VFW chapters to stay open in a few years," said Cohasset VFW president Ralph Perroncello. "We're holding our own in Cohasset. We have 188 members and we're losing one or two guys a year."

Nationally, there are approximately 8 million World War II veterans, according to Vern Pall, assistant director of public affairs for the national VFW.

Of those 8 million, approximately 1 million are members of the VFW. Those one million are more than half of the 1.9 million members of the VFW. The rest are made up of veterans from the Korean War, Vietnam, Desert Storm, and smaller conflicts like Bosnia and Grenada.

"The Veterans Administration [VA] has told us that 1,000 World War II veterans die every day," Pall said. "We did the math and figured that we're losing 200-300 VFW members every day."

Even if a World War II veteran was only 20 years old when the conflict ended in 1945, he would be 74 years old now, and facing the medical problems that men that age typically must endure.

Perroncello said that budget cuts have affected VA hospitals at a time when older veterans need them the most, a fact which has become a rallying point among VFW members nationwide.

"As we get older, we require much more medication and doctor's visits," he said. "It's very unfortunate that now is the time that the VA is trying to cut back hospitals."

As World War II veterans and Korean War veterans have gotten older, those who served in Vietnam have become the largest veterans group in the country.

"The period of the conflict was from 1962 to 1975, so there's a large span of guys who served over there, said Vietnam veteran Robert Jackson, a sergeant with the Cohasset police department. "There are over 15 million Vietnam-era veterans in the United States."

However, due to the way the Vietnam War and its veterans were viewed following the conflict, those who fought in Southeast Asia have not joined veterans groups with the same fervor as those who did in previous wars.

"I think it may be difficult for some VFW chapters to stay open in a few years. We're holding our own in Cohasset. We have 188 members and we're losing one or two guys a year."
COHASSET VFW PRESIDENT RALPH PERRONCELLO

"We don't have exact numbers, but we have between 550,000 and 600,000 Vietnam veterans in the VFW," Pall said. "That's not nearly as large a percentage as was true of World War II. I've met a lot of Vietnam guys who said that they just didn't feel welcome."

Jackson said he could understand why many Vietnam veterans might be uncomfortable with joining the VFW.

"I suppose it probably has to do with the receptions that Vietnam veterans encountered when they got back to the states," Jackson said..

Unlike the victory parades and reverence that veterans of the two World Wars had received upon their returns home, Vietnam veterans were often treated with a mixture of scorn and disgust. Some were even spat upon as a disillusioned public often blamed them for their part in a war which they did not create.

"I heard of a story from a Vietnam veteran that just broke my heart," Pall said. "He came home and his father was sitting and playing poker. His dad just looked at him and then went back to playing cards. His mother told them that there was some stereo equipment of his upstairs and that he should pay them rent for storing it at their house. He walked out and never saw his family again."

Pall said that the images of the war being broadcast on TV and the negative media coverage of the American war effort made a lot of Americans angry about the same kind of atrocities that had occurred in previous wars.

"During the bombing of Japan, there were towns that were completely burned out, and those people suffered unspeakably," Pall said. "That was all forgotten when the World War II guys got home, yet the Vietnam veterans were vilified when they came back."

The negative reaction to their homecoming soured many who had fought in Vietnam from joining veterans groups.

"There's a tendency for the Vietnam fellas not to join the VFW," Perroncello said. "I've got a couple in my group but there's not that many that are really interested."

Jackson pointed out that because Vietnam veterans are significantly younger than other veterans, many may simply not have as much time to devote to the VFW as do older veterans.

"I was very active in the post for six or seven years," he said. "But I have too much on my plate right now with work to stay very active. Maybe there are a lot of guys like that."

Pall agreed that veterans who served in Vietnam and more recent conflicts may have too much to do to devote significant time to the VFW. However, he said that World War II veterans cannot be expected to run VFW chapters forever.

"The younger guys are not quite as attuned to running the chapters, but a lot of the World War II guys are getting tired," he said. "They've been running these chapters for 50 years and they're ready for someone else to take their place."

Malvey looks back on hectic first year

Excited about future of Cohasset schools

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Most people assume the duties of a new job gradually. They take a couple of days to get settled and meet their co-workers before slowly being phased in to the actual day-to-day operations.

For Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey, however, niceties were exchanged only briefly before being thrust into controversy. Malvey is the Superintendent of Schools in Cohasset, and after taking over for the retired Stephen Hart. Mulvey was immediately tossed into the fray that was last fall's override debate.

"There was no reason to anticipate the budget difficulties," he said. "There was no indication at the time I took the job that it would happen. I wish it would have been a smoother start, but it was tremendously exciting working on the budget for fiscal year 2000."

Malvey came to Cohasset after serving for six years as Superintendent of Schools in Griswold, Conn. He said the amount of attention which is focused upon education in Cohasset has been a change for him, but a change which he welcomes.

"Cohasset is very pro-education and I was pleased by that, but not surprised" he said. "I expected that coming into such a well-educated community. A lot of towns could learn from Cohasset as far as

Newcomers' gift will save lives

Donations to funds new fire equipment

By Frank DiCesare
STAFF WRITER

Each year the Scituate/Cohasset Newcomers Club's community service group canvasses the area in search of organizations who need their financial support. This year the local fire departments were the lucky recipients.

The club donated $700 to the fire departments in Scituate and Cohasset to help firefighters in their efforts to upgrade their life-saving equipment.

In Scituate, the department will put the money toward a new $9,000 defibrillator sure to save lives on emergency medical calls for cardiac cases. Cohasset's department is using the money to buy a thermal imaging helmet designed to help locate people in smoke-filled burning buildings.

Kathleen Knight, publicity coordinator of the Scituate/Cohasset Newcomers' Club, said the community service group had several organizations to choose from, but felt the two fire departments were a high priority.

"Since the fire department needed money for equipment to save lives, a majority of the people who voted felt that was where the money was needed most," she said.

The club raised the money through a golf tournament and a raffle held at their annual December holiday party.

Firefighters in both departments expressed their appreciation

"We'd like to thank everybody who donated," said Scituate Firefighter paramedic Richard Kelly. "We are grateful to those who helped us get up and running."

The portable, toaster-sized defibrillator which administrators an electric shock to the heart and can stabilize a patient in cardiac arrest on the way to the hospital, will be the second for the Sctituate Fire Department.

Kelly said the fire department received a little more than $8,000 in donations this year, money used to purchase the new defibrillator. Additional donations made to Scituate's Fire Department will be used to purchase other types of Advanced Life Support (ALS) equipment.

"We're in pretty good shape now," Kelly said. "The ALS equipment we have know is more geared towards the adult patient. We are now looking to upgrade are pediatric equipment."

> "Since the fire department needed money for equipment to save lives, a majority of the people who voted felt that was where the money was needed most."
> KATHLEEN KNIGHT, PUBLICITY COORDINATOR OF THE SCITUATE/COHASSET NEWCOMERS' CLUB

Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the estimated $20,000 thermal imaging helmet, which uses an inferred light to find people trapped in a fire, is an item on every fire chief's wish list.

"It's modeled after the equipment used in the military," Lincoln said. "It's used to rescue victims in heavy smoke. It's also used to find fire in heavy smoke so you can go to the seat of the fire and extinguish it quickly."

The Scituate/Cohasset Newcomers' Club is a 282-member organization which has been in existence for nearly 30 years. Knight said the club serves individuals and families who are new to the area or individuals who want to meet new people.

"We want to reach people of all age groups," she said. "We don't just cater to people who have moved here."

The club offers play groups for children and their families, "Freewheelers" — weekend excursions around town and into Boston and the harbor islands for children and parents.

For men, the club offers a men's monthly poker group, a basketball league which starts in early October, and men's golf tournaments. Knight said the club is also considering starting a golf league.

Ladies enjoy monthly coffee socials hosted at different members homes.

"Usually it's a social or they will have a lecturer," Knight said. "They once had a lecture on gardening. Sometimes they do craft projects for residents."

The club also offers an empty nesters group, a galloping gourmet group, and sponsors socials for men and women. The annual wine and cheese fall social, which kicks off the season, is scheduled for September 18.

"We also offer a chili cook off in November, a nondenominational holiday party in December and a our Lightkeepers Ball — a black tie, catered affair held in June at the Lightkeeper's Cottage in Cohasset," Knight added.

Knight, who has lived in Scituate with her husband Christopher for five years, said the newcomers' club is a "worth while organization."

"When I moved to the town I had no children and my husband and I met a lot of good people," Knight said. "It's a welcoming feeling as opposed to meeting your friends haphazardly."

The sounds of history

Carillon has a fascinating past

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A reenactment of President Calvin Coolidge's August 1925 visit to Cohasset will be a part of this weekend's celebration of the 75th anniversary of the Cohasset Carillon at St. Stephen's Church.

Actor Jim Cooke will portray Coolidge on Sunday and will give a half-hour address by the president. He is scheduled to arrive at the common in an antique car at 5 p.m., and his address will be followed by a carillon recital at 6 p.m. The recital will be given by Milford Myhre from the Bok Singing Tower of Lake Wales, Florida.

While many longtime residents know the story of Coolidge's visit, the reason behind his visit may not be as well known.

Financial tycoon and Cohasset resident Clarence Barron was a friend and financial advisor to Coolidge. He owned the Oaks Farm on Sohier Street, and sent milk from his farm to the President while he was vacationing in Swampscott.

"Barron was one of the richest men in the country," said David Wadsworth of the Cohasset Historical Society. "His farm was at the top of Sohier Street, across from Fair Oaks Lane, and it was a dairy farm of prize gumsies. He made his money on Wall Street, and the farm was just a hobby of his. He was one of those during that time who were known as gentleman farmers."

In "The Narrative History of Cohasset, Vol. 2", author Bertram Pratt documented Barron's recollection of the circumstances leading to Coolidge's visit.

"The president said: 'My plan is to go on the [presidential yacht] Mayflower to Plymouth and then motor to Cohasset. I should certainly like to see your cows. I don't know whether we can lunch with you or not, but how much time would you require if I found the time to come to Plymouth?' I responded that we could be ready for him on the shortest notice."

Barron was evidently held in high esteem by Coolidge, because the President did indeed make the trip to Cohasset. Pratt recounted the events of his visit.

"The President of the United States, having been entertained at lunch at the Barron residence, stood on Cohasset Common, listening to the carillon which had been installed in the tower of St. Stephen's Church the previous year."

The bells were donated to St. Stephens in 1924 by Jane Bancroft, who was Clarence Barron's daughter. The donation was made in memory of Bancroft's mother, Jessie Barron, who had passed away in 1918. The Barron family were longstanding members of the congregation at St. Stephens, a tradition that was continued by Bancroft's daughter, Jane Cook.

The original carillon had 51 bells, and was crafted in Croydon, England from the works of Gillett & Johnston, one of the two English firms which produced carillons at the time.

The carillon was dedicated 75 years ago, on Sept. 23, 1924, almost a year before Coolidge's historic visit. Performing at the dedication ceremony was Belgian carilloneur Kamiel Lefevere, who was one of the best carilloneurs in the world.

"Lefevere studied at the foremost carillon school in the world, which was in the Belgian town of Malines," Wadsworth said. "His teacher was Jef Denyn, who was probably the most famous carilloneur in the world. Lefevere became a member of the faculty at Malines as well, and he gave concerts here into the 1950s."

Lefevere and Denyn were carilloneurs at St. Rombold's Cathedral in Malines. The carillon in St. Rombold's was considered the finest in the world at that time. Denyn himself gave a concert in Cohasset in September 1927, but it was Lefevere who brought his renowned talents to the town common year after year.

Lefevere gave two concerts the day the carillon was dedicated. He played songs such as "Auld Lang Syne," "My Old Kentucky Home," and "The Star Spangled Banner."

The concerts which followed drew thousands to Cohasset Common and were broadcast on local radio sta-

PILGRIM COOPERATIVE BANK 1916

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR CUSTOMERS OF THE PILGRIM CO-OPERATIVE BANK

The Federal Reserve has asked banks to make absolutely sure customers understand two things about the coming "Y2K" date changeover:

Banks nationwide have been preparing for "Y2K" for a long time — 2 to 3 years in some cases.
Here at Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, every piece of computer equipment is brand-new and has been tested to detect potential date-change problems. We've passed these tests with flying colors — as have financial institutions nationwide. That's not to say there won't be any glitches anywhere. But, thanks to our advance preparations and back-up plans, the Bank is in very good shape to avoid "Y2K" problems.

The safest place for your money? In the bank! AARP is recommending you keep "a long weekend's worth" of cash on-hand for New Year's 2000. That sounds about right. And since your FDIC/SIF deposit insurance coverage is not in any way affected by "Y2K," the safest place for the rest of your money is in your insured accounts here in the Bank. Scam artists and crooks see "Y2K" as a major opportunity. Don't give them a chance to take advantage of you!

If you have any questions or any concerns about "Y2K" and your money, please call 781-383-0541 or come see us. We'll talk it over and help you get the answers and information you need to set your mind at ease. Our goal: To help you see New Year's 2000 as a true cause for celebration, not worry!

Chiropractic for HEALTH
by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

AGING WELL

As people enter middle age, they have good reason to avail themselves of chiropractic treatment. In fact, an estimated one in five adults between the ages of 55 and 64 has visited a chiropractor. When confronted with the symptoms of arthritis and other chronic ailments associated with aging, patients often find chiropractic visits helpful in increasing flexibility, which results in improved mobility. Natural and effective chiropractic care also provides an alternative to relying on drugs for the relief of pain and other symptoms. This is especially important when one takes into account concerns over unwanted side effects, over-medication, and dangerous drug combinations. Chiropractic's goal is to attain greater vitality and quality of life by unleashing the body's own restorative energy.

Gentle and safe chiropractic care can help people of all ages. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we recommend a chiropractic checkup for all members of the family. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we want to educate you so that you can make choices you feel good about, are comfortable with, and can be committed to. Remember that we do not use drugs and address the cause of the problem, not just the symptoms. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment for chiropractic care that will take you into the 21st century. We utilize all the latest scientific research combined with holistic and chiropractic philosophy. Call us to find out more about our "Mother's Morning Out" program.

P.S. Chiropractors are trained in nutrition so that they may guide older patients to the eating habits that are likely to offer most benefit.

Former owner of J.J.'s pitches Driftway driving course

By Frank DiCesare
STAFF WRITER

Golf balls my soon by flying on both sides of the Driftway. Local builder James Sherrin pitched a plan to build a new golf driving range right across the street from the town owned Widow's Walk Golf Course. "Competition is good. I'm looking forward to it," said Sherrin, who presented his plans for the Irish Moss Golf Practice Range to planning board members Thursday.

Sherrin, who is seeking a site plan special permit to construct a 31-space parking lot to abut the proposed range, is planning to lease the land on which to construct his driving range from the Lillian Rousseau Estate in back of South Shore Auto on the Driftway.

Sherrin said the driving range will not be visible to motorists traveling on the Driftway.

"You'll have to drive into the place to see it," Sherrin said. "You won't see it from the Driftway."

Sherrin's attorney Michael F. Loring of Scituate said a site plan special permit is required for applicants looking to make changes or alterations in a business district and planning to have five or more parking spaces for their business. He said his client hopes to have his driving range opened for business by next spring.

"But before you do anything like this you need to get your permits and it takes time to do that," Loring said.

Bob Sanderson, director of golf operations at Widow's Walk Golf Course, said the potential competition is of no concern to him.

"It doesn't bother me at all," Sanderson said. "Our range brings in revenue but it's in an environmentally protected area so we have to hand pick it [retrieve the balls by hand]. Obviously we will lose some business but it will upgrade the quality of our range. The less traffic you have on the driving range the better we'll be able to keep the quality on our range tees."

Sanderson added that the proposed driving range "will take some of the [customer service] pressure off" of Widow's Walk.

"Since we have to hand pick, which takes about three hours, our golfers will have some place else to go," Sanderson said. "It will satisfy our customers during the times in which we are closed. We may lose some revenue but the quality of our range will improve. But I'm not the least bit concerned."

But traffic and environmental issues have town officials concerned. Town planner Laura Harbottle said Sherrin's proposed driveway appears to be on the railroad right of way which is town property. If Sherrin wishes to use that land, Harbottle said, he will need to get an authorization from the board of selectmen.

Harbottle said Sherrin has not yet shown the planning board the degree to which the increased traffic coming in and out of the proposed driving range will affect the area.

"It's a very busy location on the Driftway," Harbottle said. "[The planning board] will have to look at whether the increased traffic is too much in that location, driving in and out of the Driftway."

Harbottle also said she would like to see the driving range separated from the 42 Marshfield school busses stored by Totman Enterprises Inc. for the Marshfield School System.

Town officials have also raised concerns on the possible environmental impact the proposed driving range may have on the area's wetlands. Conservation agent Vincent J. Kalishes III said Sherrin will need to file a notice of intent with the conservation commission on any work he plans to do near the salt marsh area.

"His range abuts a salt marsh area within 100 feet of it which is subject to coastal storm flowage," Kalishes said. "They will have to file with the commission with what they propose to do down there, but we have nothing in front of us now."

If his plan is approved this will be the second driving range Sherrin has run.

Sherrin operated the Cohasset Green driving range across from J.J.'s Dairy Hut on Chief Justice Cushing Highway from 1994 to 1997. He said his new range calls for 20 grass tee boxes and optional mats for golfers who wish to use them. He said most golfers prefer to hit balls off of grass tee boxes.

Fees would range from $5 to $6 for a large bucket of about 65 balls and $3 for a small bucket of 35 balls. A 50 cent senior citizen discount on buckets is also planned, he said.

CARL WILL BE MISSED

Last week was a sad week for most of Cohasset (and all of the surrounding towns) — Carl S. Sestito, better known as "Bumpy," passed away. What a man he was! Always with a smile and kind word, always working, always happy — and did his grandchildren think the world of him — to prove that fact, one of his grandsons wanted him to be his best man at his wedding! Now, is that special or what? Carl was a loving gentleman, a wonderful father and grandfather, and a special friend to all who knew him. He surely will be missed!

READ TO RIDE WINNERS!

Congratulations to Margaux Donze, age 7, and R.K. Quebec, age 9, of Cohasset! Margaux and R.K. were two of the 30 winners to be awarded a brand new bike for participating in the first annual Read to Ride program this summer!

The Read to Ride reading incentive program is a community service project sponsored by Dependable Cleaners in conjunction with Quincy Cycle, International Bicycle, The Patriot Ledger and Radio Disney. The program is aimed towards encouraging children to read over the summer months. It provides students, ages 6-15, with the opportunity to win a bicycle each time they read a book by submitting an entry form during the months of June and July. This summer, more than 2,500 entries were received and 30 new bicycles were awarded.

Hurray for Margaux and R.K.!

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Getting beyond rhetoric, bureaucracy at the Base

Few people should expect the redevelopment of one of the South Shore's last largest tracts of land to go smoothly. There are too many issues to iron out before the South Weymouth Naval Air Station is transformed from vacant hangars and toxic sites to a lush golf course, toney shopping plaza with its upscale outlet stores, and a thriving entertainment complex.

That's why the Environmental Protection Agency's letter last week suggesting more study needs to be done should come as no surprise. In fact, it should be welcome news.

The impact of redeveloping the 1,450 acres of land straddling Weymouth, Abington and Rockland has far reaching implications throughout the South Shore. There is much work ahead and residents should be relieved to see it won't be on the fast track. The redevelopment plan, however, should not linger indefinitely like so many other projects caught up in bureaucracy and debate (does the Greenbush rail line in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate ring a bell?).

Members of the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation say the news from the EPA reaffirms what issues had been identified three years ago in the reuse plan. So the group was hardly caught off-guard by the letter from EPA regional administrator John DeVillars. And while that is comforting, it's time to see some real action and hard-core data on how the plan will impact key issues such as traffic, water and sewerage.

If you're living in the comfort of your home some 10 miles or more away from the base and think none of these issues impact your life, think again. Just imagine what 30,000 to 50,000 more cars a day traveling on Route 3 will do to your already jammed commute home to Cohasset or Marshfield. Mills Corporation officials, those who want to build the megamall, expect that amount of traffic to make its way to their shops which in other areas of the country include high-priced outlets like Donna Karan and Off Fifth Avenue (part of the Sax's Fifth Avenue group).

Our report in last week's newspaper, compiled after extensive research and interviews, detailed the issues related to traffic as well as key concerns about several potentially dangerous toxic sites which have yet to be cleaned up, some two years after the base was decommissioned by the Navy. Water usage is also a critical part of the plan which needs in-depth study and analysis. The South Shore already has more than its share of chronic water usage problems and reuse of the base will only further complicate those if not fully addressed. Ultimately, there are only so many sources to tap for water supplies on the South Shore and we can't drain them without taking proper steps to identify how to supply some 250,000 gallons a day for the proposed mall and another 300,000 gallons per day for the planned golf course.

Several key meetings discussing various aspects of the base will be coming up in September. Residents will get a chance to hear and comment about alternatives to a controversial connector road linking the development to Route 3, and also learn what the Navy plans to do about final cleanup plans. These sessions afford residents a chance to learn more, get educated and also offer feedback.

This is a critical project, one that must be decided based on full disclosure of the issues, not on rhetoric and bureaucracy. This valuable tract of land has tremendous potential as a site for a large mall, as well for senior housing and an industrial park for businesses. Plans can't be disregarded off-hand nor can they just receive a rubber-stamp approval.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on three roll calls from recent House debate on a proposed $21 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. Although the fiscal year began on July 1, the House and Senate have yet to agree on a version of a new budget. Temporary monthly budgets approved by both branches have kept the state in business. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

TAX APPEALS(H 4400) House 149-0, approved an amendment repealing the current law that taxpayers who are appealing any state tax bill be required to pay the disputed tax prior to the resolution of the appeal. Amendment supporters said it is unfair to the taxpayer to be forced to pay a disputed tax when it may be later determined that he does not owe it. They noted the repeal of this unreasonable requirement is a taxpayer-friendly move which will also serve as an incentive for the state to accelerate the appeal process. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment).

Senator: Y
Representative: Y

AG POWER(H 4400) House 129-23, rejected an amendment modifying the current law under which the attorney general, without legislative review, can make rules and regulations interpreting consumer protection laws. The amendment requires any such regulations to go to a legislative committee which may then hold public hearings and recommend changes. If the AG decides not to adopt the changes, the regulations would only go into effect after he explains his objections in writing. Amendment supporters said current law gives the AG excessive power and noted the amendment ensures public and legislative review and input. They pointed to recent controversial regulations on tobacco and firearms established by the AG without legislative input. Amendment opponents said this major change should not be attached to a state budget. They noted that legislation dealing with the issue has been filed as a separate bill and should go through the regular legislative process. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment setting up the system of legislative review. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

Senator: Y
Representative: Y

SPECIAL EDUCATION(H 4400) House 128-24, rejected an amendment providing that one percent of Chapter 70 Education funds given to communities by the state, be placed into a Special Education Trust Fund. The fund would be used to reimburse school districts up to 50 percent of the additional costs of educating some special education students. Amendment supporters said the rising costs of special education are a big concern for many school districts and argued this plan will begin to solve some of the problems. They noted the legislature has refused to act on various comprehensive proposals to solve the problem. Amendment opponents said this bandaid approach will not solve the special education problem and noted a comprehensive package will soon be drafted and considered by the legislature. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment creating the trust fund. A "Nay" vote is against it).

Carillon has a fascinating past

tions WEEI and WNAC as well. Live concert broadcasts were still relatively new in the mid-1920s, and people were astonished to be able to hear the carillon concerts in the privacy if their own homes.

Former Jerusalem Road resident Florence Colby was one of those who enjoyed the carillon concerts, and she wrote a letter to WEEI dated Aug. 30, 1925, in which she thanked the station for its broadcast.

"I have been one of the fortunate ones to hear many of M. Lefevere's concerts this season," she wrote, "but it so happened that I could not attend this one today, so the broadcast was especially appreciated. The tones carried beautifully and it was hard to believe that I was not one of the thousands around Cohasset Common."

The great number of concerts over the years had an alarming effect on the bells of the carillon, and many began to fall into disrepair. Recognizing that the carillon was an important part of the town's history, residents and church members raised $500,000 to renovate the bells.

The renovations, which were done by John Taylor Bellfounders, Ltd. of Loughborough, England, were completed early in 1990. Thirty-five of the carillon's original 51 bells were replaced, and six new bells were added. The 57-bell carillon which resulted were tuned to concert pitch and represent the largest carillon in New England.

According to carilloneur Sally Slade Warner, who will give a recital of music from the 1920s as part of this weekend's 75th anniversary celebration, the 57-bell carillon is the largest in New England by number of bells, while the 53-bell carillon at Yale University in New Haven, Conn. is the largest by weight.

The largest bell in the Cohasset Carillon weighs 11,280 pounds and plays the note of 'g', while the smallest weighs 29 pounds and plays the note of 'e.' To play the carillon, a carilloneur uses a keyboard which resembles an organ. The carillon keyboard has short levers in the place of keys and those levers are connected by wires to the clappers of the bells. By putting pressure on the levers, the carilloneur causes the bells to ring.

The sounds of the carillon will be heard all weekend at Cohasset Common, starting with the concert by Warner and assistant Mary Kennedy on Saturday at 6 p.m. They will perform music from the 1920s, bringing listeners the music that characterized that decade of prosperity.

Their concert should get everyone in the mood for Sunday's reenactment of Coolidge's 1925 a[illegible]ss, which will be held at 5 p.m. The carillon recital by Myhre will follow at 6 p.m., and all are invited to attend. Admission to the presidential address and the recital are free. Residents may wish to bring blankets and lawn chairs so that they may relax and enjoy the music of the Cohasset Carillon, as townspeople did 75 years ago.

A clambake for 100 will also be held at 4:30 p.m. on Sunday. Tickets shift would come at the expense of public safety.

"We've all expressed concern about the overtime," she told Haddad. "But you're not addressing the safety concern."

Haddad responded by saying that safety would not be bargained by having fewer call backs.

"The average ambulance run is an hour and a half and there's no reason we can't operate short shift during that time," he said. "If a major call comes in for a fire, there's going to be mutual aid from other towns anyway. Four guys can't put out a fire."

While mutual aid firefighters are often called from surrounding towns, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said having fewer than four firefighters on duty was unacceptable.

"It's too risky and too dangerous," he said. "You cannot predict when fires or accidents are going to happen and you need to have the firefighters on duty to attend to the problem."

Firefighter Frank Mahoney, who is president of Local 2804, the Cohasset Permanent Firefighters Union, said reductions in staffing at the fire department may result in losing mutual aid from other towns.

"We're already at the bare minimum," he said. "Other towns won't go for that and it's getting more frequent that we're getting simultaneous calls. You've got to have four firefighters on duty."

Haddad said that safety concerns were not such a large concern at budget time last December, when selectmen denied his request for $154,000 to hire four firefighters who would also have been trained paramedics.

Firefighter Matthew Marr said that overtime became a necessary evil once selectmen decided not to hire four additional firefighters.

"I didn't want to lose four men but the selectmen made that decision and now they have to live with the overtime," he said. "The town has to make a decision to either have a fire department or not have one."

Marr added that he did not appreciate the fact that Haddad was taking the fire department to task for its handling of overtime.

"I have a problem with the fact that the town is paying the fire chief $60,000 and yet he has no power," Marr said. "The town is emasculating the fire chief."

"I get paid $75,000 to run the finances of this town," Haddad retorted. "I'm not telling the chief that he can't do his job."

Following that heated exchange, all involved calmed down a bit and focused on how best to solve the overtime problem.

"The last two years, the overtime expenditures have been $179,000 and $197,000," Haddad said. "We have to go back to the town each year and ask for more money. Do we put on more guys or not fully man these shifts? We're right back where we started last year."

Firefighter Bob Protulis asked why this year's overtime budget was set significantly lower than the overtime expenditures of the previous two years.

"If the overtime budget has been $179,000 and $197,000 the last two years, why budget $128,000 this year?" he asked. "It seems like the budgeting isn't being done properly."

"That's a great question," Haddad said. "The answer is that we just don't have the money."

Selectman Merle Brown acknowledged that it might be appropriate to revisit Haddad's request for four additional firefighters.

"Maybe we better look at the four men again," he said. "But they should all be paramedics."

The town now only hires firefighters who are trained as paramedics. One firefighter, Laura Morrison, is already trained as a paramedic and another is currently training to be a paramedic.

"If we got four more guys, that would mean four additional paramedics as well, Mahoney said. "We'd be up to six paramedics and with the extra guys, we wouldn't have overtime as much."

While getting money from the town for program improvements is difficult for many town departments, firefighter Bill Protulis said the people of Cohasset need to decide what importance they place on public safety.

"What it comes down to," he said, "is does the town think it's money well spent to get four paramedics for the town's lifesaving concerns?"

eighth graders in a brand-new, state-of-the-art computer lab. The new lab and new teaching position are just part of the school district's commitment to further integrate technology into the school curriculum.

To ensure that technology will continue to be woven into classrooms throughout the school district, longtime seventh-grade science teacher Ken Cisneros has moved into a new role as technology coordinator for the entire district. In that role, Cisneros will oversee the continued implementation of computer technology into Cohasset classrooms, and he relishes the opportunity.

"It took me quite a while to get used to the idea that I wouldn't be in the classroom teaching anymore, but I'm really excited about our technology plan and where we're going with it," Cisneros said.

Cisneros is particularly excited about the new computer lab in the middle school, which he says will be the model for all future computer labs in Cohasset schools.

"There are 36 brand-new PCs going into the new lab, and they're all networked together," he said. "The new computers have 17-inch monitors, and there are scanners, and laser printers in the lab as well. There's also going to be a large screen at the front of the room and a multimedia projector so the teacher can show what she is doing to all of the students on the big screen."

Cisneros said the upgrade in technology was sorely needed and he was heartened to see the changes that he had been pushing for as a member of the school's technology committee.

"I wouldn't have taken this position if things were going to stay the way they have been," he said. "But now we have a four-year technology plan and we know what we will need to make it happen. We've never done anything top-shelf before as far as technology and when the kids see something nice, they'll treat it nice."

All of the new computers in the lab have had Microsoft Office 2000 installed, and all of the teachers in the school system will be trained in Office 2000 as well.

"The computers in the lab have Front Page 2000 installed as well, which allows students to build web pages," Cisneros said.

While the 36 new computers in the middle school's state-of-the-art lab offer seventh and eighth graders significant technology advances, those advances have not been limited to the middle school.

Osgood, Deer Hill, and CMHS have all been wired with a 56K internet line and 12 new computers have been installed at Osgood as well. Deer Hill has received 37 new computers and CMHS has received 70 in addition to the 36 installed in the new lab. Over 50 new printers have also been distributed throughout the three schools.

Cisneros said an added benefit of the new computer lab in the middle school is that it would be perfect for community computer classes.

"We're already talking about what an asset labs like this can be for the town," he said. "We'd love for senior citizens to come in and be able to learn from the kids. There are so many things that we can do. We're looking at having a technology open house in addition to the regular open house so that parents and people throughout the town can see what we've done."

As a science teacher, Cisneros focused heavily upon using technology, and became known as a computer guru throughout the school.

"We did a lot of stuff on the Internet, and the kids were really into it," he said. "We created a healthy school environment website, and our study was instrumental in getting the library fixed. The kids developed a survey and we're looking to put it on CDs and send it to other schools."

For their work, the students received the Local Heroes Award from the South Shore chapter of the American Lung Association and were recognized nationally by the Eisenhower National Clearinghouse.

The students also created web pages about whales and did internet research on their names. The students particularly enjoyed using the school's digital camera.

"The kids just loved that they could take a picture and we could put it up on the wall right away," Cisneros said.

Cisneros will work with school administrators and teachers to implement curriculum that will allow teachers to similarly integrate technology into their classes.

"We've looked at a number of different curriculums throughout the country, particularly in Virginia, where they've been ahead of the game as far as technology goes," he said. "The first step is to find out what the kids know or don't know."

The new computer applications teacher, Kristine O'Connor, will begin by teaching the children how to use the different programs in Office 2000, such as word, excel, and power point. After the students have learned the basic skills, the focus will turn toward integrating these skills into the classroom.

While excited about the new lab and the opportunities which it offers, Cisneros said it is only one step toward fulfilling the district's technology goals.

"Each year we'll add more computers and software, and we'd like to have labs like this in all Cohasset schools," he said.

School officials seek true middle school

vations are concerned, the changes that are made at Deer Hill and CMHS will have far-reaching implications for the future of the school system, officials said.

For that reason, the school committee is looking at five grade configurations options, which architects Gene Raymond and Don Walters presented at the school board meeting on Monday night.

One of the proposed configurations involved moving the sixth grade to CMHS, to create a more traditional middle school.

The change would undoubtedly require significant alterations to the middle-high school in order to create a more separate middle school environment. However, Supt. of Schools Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said the switch would serve the needs of the students.

"From an educational standpoint, moving the sixth graders to the middle school and bringing the third graders to Deer Hill makes sense," he said. "But how do you fit that in with what the community wants to spend?"

The cost of any such renovation project will be heavily weighed and would be subject to a town meeting vote, he said. Possible changes are an addition at Deer Hill and a new gym and extra buses for the middle-high school, which would allow the middle school to become a more separate entity.

Taking cost out of the equation, Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan and CMHS principal Curtis Collins focused upon what grade configuration would best serve the needs of Cohasset students.

"We were looking to make plans from an educational point of view, and it makes sense educationally to have grades 6-8 together," Callahan said. "Moving the third grade to Deer Hill would also allow room for full-day kindergarten at Osgood."

Collins added that moving to a 6-8 grade configuration in the middle school would keep Cohasset in line with what is happening in schools statewide.

"Primarily for developmental reasons, curriculum frameworks are being developed for 6-8," he said. "There's a recognition of the distinct ambiance of middle school life."

School committee member Stephanie Noble asked Malvey if the idea of a 6-8 middle school was just a passing trend in education.

"Where did the middle school concept come from?" she asked. "Are middle schools just the flavor of the week?"

Malvey answered that the middle school concept was a result of the dissatisfaction with junior high schools, which were viewed as watered-down versions of high schools.

"The middle school gives a sense of identity to children who are at a very difficult age," he said. "Junior high schools did not fit that bill."

Collins noted that he sees the differences between middle school students and those in high school on a daily basis.

"You can't treat them like minor-league high schoolers," he said of middle school students. "They're at a different point in their lives and you have to have different events and different celebrations for them."

Due to those differences, Collins said he feels it is necessary that renovations at CMHS make the middle school a more separate entity.

"The community wants that separateness, and it's going to become essential if you bring in sixth-graders," he said. "I don't want more of the younger kids in locker rooms with high school kids, so we're going to have to have separateness in terms of the physical plant."

While moving the sixth grade to CMHS would create a more traditional middle school, school committee member Kathy Ofsthun was unsure of the reasons behind the proposed move of the third grade from Osgood to Deer Hill.

"What would the goal of moving the third grade be?" she asked. "We just built the new Osgood school and I don't want a bunch of classrooms left empty."

Callahan responded that moving the third grade to Deer Hill would free up space for full-day kindergarten, which is being instituted in Hingham for the 2000-2001 school year and may become state law in the future. In addition, the change would create four evenly sized schools in the district.

The state may fund 60 percent of the renovations, but only if the school district can demonstrate that those renovations fulfill one of two criteria. The renovations must fulfill specified program goals or must be done in order to meet the additional demand caused by increased enrollment.

One of the proposed renovation options is to simply do repairs on the infrastructure of the two schools. Fixing some leaky pipes and sprucing up the physical plants of Deer Hill and CMHS, however, may not be enough to get state funding.

"If you wanted to do infrastructure improvements only, you could add modular classrooms or send the overflow of students at Deer Hill to Osgood," Walters told the school committee. "The state might have some tough questions though. If the solution is modular classrooms, the work would not be reimbursable."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said getting state funding is a necessity regarding whatever renovations occur.

"Would we risk the state saying that we weren't doing enough?" he asked rhetorically. "We don't want to have to spend 100-cent dollars instead of 60-cent dollars and we have to make sure we're comparing options equal for state reimbursement."

A joint meeting of the school committee and the school facilities committee was held on Wednesday night in order to tell the architects which options to study in more detail. The meeting occurred after the Mariner had gone to press, but its events will be covered in detail in next week's edition.

Ace reporter flees Mariner nest to join the BC Eagles

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

You've probably heard about the kickbacks, groupies, the posh hotel rooms, the fast, comfortable transportation. There was some of that, I'll admit, but my five years as a sportswriter here at the Mariner were really so much more.

During the first month of eighth grade, before I had grown into the fully matured young man that I am now, one of my mother's friends mentioned that the Mariner was looking for someone to cover high school sports.

Unknowingly, Mrs. Niessink had unleashed upon the hundreds of thousands of Mariner readers a literate force so powerful that the editors are probably still clutching their sides after reading my first article. Poor style hardly describes what I produced that week.

I started off covering football, then sort of naturally gravitated towards basketball and baseball. I knew the games, knew the players, knew the coach, and figured, at least, we could work out some type of playing time-for-good publicity deal when my athletic career reached the varsity level.

Later, I got to branch out and write some profiles and feature pieces in addition to covering the games themselves.

Over half a decade, I have seen some really great stuff. The other day, I was reading a beautifully written article by Jim Murray, the great L.A. sportswriter, in which he listed some of the wonderful things he'd seen in sports.

I haven't had the privilege of watching Henry Aaron turn on a fastball; I've never seen Sandy Koufax throw high gas, never seen Johnny Unitas throw a football through a thimble. Tragically, the only images I have of Muhammad Ali dancing and stinging come from video.

But I have covered high school sports for five years. Probably 250 games, anywhere from 150 to 200 articles. And I'll never forget stepping out of the tunnel at the Boston Garden, taking in the old house a year before they tore it down.

The basketball team had come to the state semifinals, and that year was the last time it was played in the Garden. Coach Ron Ford had kindly invited me to come and we arrived hours before game time. We walked on the floor, took pictures; I got to meet Dan Shaughnessy, who was banging on his laptop at courtside.

I've been inside the UN, Westminster Abbey, the White House, Harvard Stadium. Not much beats walking into one of the most storied edifices in sports history and losing your breath.

I'll never forget Brian Sasso, with torn ligaments in his knee and his other leg bandaged up as well, leaving his heart and soul in that unprintable of a field in Hull on Thanksgiving Day in 1995.

His team was whipped and battered by a much better Hull team, but Sasso played both ways that day, and delivered the gutsiest performance I've ever seen. Losing 41-0, Sasso refused to come out, then rode the bus ride home without lifting his head. It was Willis Reed, Kellen Winslow, Rocky Balboa.

Then, three years later, I watched and cheered as the Skippers finally beat Hull. My classmates, some of them weeping, held aloft the trophy as parents, friends, and former players looked on with cameras and wide smiles.

I got to write an article about my own jock of a sister. Watching her beam as she told of how she became a New England champion in crew was fantastic and being able to celebrate that with her, in print, was wonderful.

I've been what is called a "homer," a shameless rooter for the hometown team, a la Tommy Heinsohn. This has made for some relatively humorous moments, as a reader might come away from an article thinking that the Skippers played poetically, when, in fact, they had been beaten soundly.

I've written about a cyclist, a swimmer, pep rallies, former pro basketball players, a no-hitter thrown by a JV pitcher, blowouts, triple overtime games. I've written something like twenty-five articles just about games against Norwell.

And here's where this piece de-

Coby's memory lives on

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Rick and "Q" Cutler were up and out the door in the dawn hours before the start of Sunday's Fourth Annual Coby's Run 10K/5K and 1K races.

But before heading to the start and finish area at the Gates Intermediate School, they spent some quiet time at the Mount Hope Cemetery with their late son.

"It's a source of strength for us," said Rick. "There's something about it that gets the day going."

For the parents of Coby Cutler, race day was tougher than usual. It was four years ago Sunday that the popular Scituate resident died after being struck by lightning at Marine basic training at Parris Island.

When dawn turned to early morning it was the runners' turn to keep Coby's memory alive as more than 600 road racers battled it out in the three events under drizzly skies and cool temperatures.

Scituate runners dominated the field of 293 runners in the 10K race as locals captured first place on the men's and women's side.

Solomon Tsegai turned away the challenges of Framingham's Edgar Gonzalez and Brian Culley of LaJolla, Calif., on the way to a finishing time of 32 minutes, 26 seconds. Tsegai pulled away from Culley over the last 200 yards for a six-second victory. Gonzalez was third in 32:53. Fabio Francisco (34:31) and Whitman's Bob Ruel (34:39) rounded out the top five.

On the women's side, Holly Madden moved up to the 10K after winning the 5K race in '98. The results, though, were the same.

Madden, who ran 3:16 in April's Boston Marathon, let Marshfield's Lucy Canavan set the pace through the early miles before coming on hard to take the lead and a 40:36 victory. Canavan, winner of the recent Jane's Chase beach race in Hull, never faltered in finishing 16 seconds back with a time of 40:52. Colleen Ellis of Scituate crossed the line in third at 41:07.

A group of Marines ran in step the entire race, chanting "Look up in the sky and what do I see, Coby Cutler gazing at me."

"That just gave me a chill," said Rick of the Marines' tribute to Coby.

Greg Putman simply ran away from the 5K (3.1 miles) field to win by 1:25. The South Weymouth resident averaged a scorching 4:51-per-mile pace en route to first place. Abington's Melissa Henderson scored most lopsided victory of the day, taking the women's division in 19:10. Henderson finished ninth overall, a whopping 3:31 over the second-place woman.

Sailing 210 Nationals return

By Barry McGurn
CORRESPONDENT

For the first time since 1988, the 210 National Championships have returned to Cohasset this week.

"It's kind of fun when it comes to Cohasset," admitted Cohasset's Wisner Murray, who has been sailing these particular boats for approximately ten years and finished fifth out of what he called a "healthy showing of" 24 boats on Monday. "Because we like to think Ray Hunt did his thing here."

Now, Ray Hunt has a little something to do with this event. This "visionary" as Murray called him, invented first the 110, then the 210 sailing boats - the second some fifty years ago.

And the national championship prize? Naturally, the C. Raymond Hunt Trophy.

The double-ended larger 210 (a 30-foot boat as opposed to the 19-foot 110) was created by Hunt in 1945 and still maintains its modern look.

"The 210s have been sort of the class-act of the day," said Murray, who was pleased with his fifth-place showing in his boat Impetuous on Monday, an event which is being hosted by the 210 fleet of the Cohasset Yacht Club. "They were certainly one of the more popular boats and they still hold huge respect, even if they don't hold they greatest numbers on the line.

"They just are a dream to sail."

Finishing ahead of Murray on Monday, the first of four days for the national championship, was Falmouth's Oakley Jones (fourth in his boat Pig Pen), Hingham's Kye Partridge (third, Pear Tree Too), Bob Slattery and Susan Epstein (second, In the Hunt, naturally named after the creator) and Jim Babel, a doctor from Gull Lake, Michigan, who, in his boat Gullstone, just nipped Slattery and Epstein after those two had led most of the day.

The low-point scoring system is fairly simple. For example, five points are awarded for fifth place, four for fourth and so on. The advantage for the winner is that instead of receiving one point, they receive three-quarters of a point.

The goal, of course, is to accumulate as few points as possible in at least four races (the number required to constitute a national championship) over the four days. Another twist is, if there are at least five races completed (of the scheduled seven), the competitors may throw out their worst-scoring race.

Usually the top sailors from each of the fleets compete in this event. Cohasset is represented by Murray (who, as well as competing, also volunteered to do the registration this year), Stu Hebb, Wiley Wakeman, Tom Hamilton, Chuck Samuelson, Charlie Henry and Diarmuid O'Connell.

Hingham's Jim and Russell Robinson, also were one of at least four father-son combinations competing in this event that includes competitors from Hingham, Falmouth, Cohasset, Hull, Marblehead, Scituate, South Boston and as far away as Milwaukee.

The races begin at 10:30 a.m. each morning about 2 1/2 nautical miles offshore of Cohasset, within sight of Minot's Light. Thursday will include race seven with an awards dinner following at Atlantica in Cohasset.

Scituate's Debra Connolly averaged 6:45 miles in capturing the 40-49 division in 41:49. Beth Kenney finished second (45:24) and Westwood's Nancy Antin was third (46:36). Kathleen Fitzgerald, also of Scituate, won the 19-and-under division with her 44:26 over Marshfield's Erin McManus (47:06). Loretta McClary of Waltham was third (47:06) and Scituate's Sophia Logan crossed the line in fourth (49:06). Allisaon Claery finished in fifth (59:36).

Weymouth's Shannon Delvecchio maintained 6:40 miles to nail down first in the 20-29 category with a time of 41:18. LaNeve Sanola of Cohasset defeated Weymouth's Anne McDonald of Weymouth, 1:07:47 to 1:15:48 in the 60-69 category and North Weymouth's Betsy Knapp won the 50-59 category in 59:26.

For the men, Scituate's Nick Rofe was fourth in the 20-29 group with a 38:23. In the 19-and-under division, it was Adam Mulliken of Kingston in 39:51, Bob Morgan of Cohasset and Scituate's Joe McElroy.

Francisco was the division winner, while Tsegai was first in the 20-29 division. Mike Scott of Scituate was fourth in the 30-39 group, crossing the line 20 seconds ahead of Plymouth's Patrick Ryan. They ran 39:15 and 39:35, respectively.

All proceeds from the races will be used to finance the construction of a fitness room at Scituate High School. Coby was an avid weightlifter and trained hard with the iron preparing for boot camp.

Rick Cutler said close to $72,000 has been raised over the four years and construction of the fitness room could begin as early as some time this fall. Funds raised by the race in the future will be used to maintain the fitness room.

Skate with Us pre-registration announced for September 4

"Skate With US", the Skating Club of Hingham's learn to skate basic skills program, begins Sept. 11 on Rink C at the Pilgrim Skating Arena in Hingham.

Pre-registration will take place Saturday, Sept. 4, from 10:30 a.m. to noon at the Pilgrim Skating Rink. Lessons are Saturdays from 11:10 a.m. to 12:10 p.m., beginning Sept. 11, and run weekly until April 29.

A $20 annual registration fee is due at registration and a monthly ice bill of $20 is paid the first Saturday of every month. Check or exact change, please. Children must be at least 4 years old at the time of registration.

Skate With US membership is limited. Each year this program has extensive waiting lists. Registration will be taken on a first come-first serve basis. Questions may be directed to the skating club office at (781) 741-8194.

The Skating Club of Hingham is celebrating its 27th year. Skate With US is a USFSA program that consists of comprehensive lesson/test structure that is exciting, rewarding, safe and fun. Chevrolet has joined with the United States Figure Skating Association (USFSA) to sponsor this program.

It has proven to be an overwhelming success across the USA. Whether your goal is to achieve Olympic fame or simply to enjoy the recreational benefits of skating, the "Skate With US" program is for you.

The Skating Club of Hingham's "Skate With US" will be taught by professionals with assistance from enthusiastic and skilled volunteer instructors from the skating club. Due to the popularity of this program we will be using the large ice rink again this year.

All students receive basic skills instruction in small groups and are tested once a month. A skills and badge progression helps encourage and reward skating progress.

The program has been very popular on the South Shore and with the large ice rink surface it will fill up very quickly.

If space is still available after pre-registration Sept. 4, registrations will be taken at the Pilgrim Skating Rink from 10:30 a.m. to noon Saturday, Sept. 11, and the first Saturday of each month until the program is full. Don't miss out! Register early.

Free web sites available

Does your team have a free web site yet? The fall sports season is almost here and the Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), is offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

For high school coaches, this is a great way to get out the news of your team without spending any money from your town's school budget. There's no need to wait for some outside company to handle all the coding because you, members of your team and/or their parents can easily update these sites.

For more information on this free program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

CNC will provide the web site and train organization representatives in web page design and building, using self-publishing internet software that is accessible from any computer. No software is needed. Most people only need one 2 1/2-hour training session to get the hang of it. And there's a handy online manual available as a reference. Unlike some other offers, this one has no hidden fees and there are no catches - this is absolutely free.

Each group and team will build and maintain its own site. Post game results, schedules, a calendar of events, bulletin boards, lists of officials and team rosters, photos and/or directions to fields. Also, create maps and forms.

This program is available to all youth, adult, recreational and high school sports teams and organizations. Even groups who already have web sites are invited to join in and be a part of this growing web network.

Oceanside Bike Fest raises funds for MS

On Sept. 18, hundreds of cyclists will enjoy a day touring along the South Shore while pedaling toward a cure for multiple sclerosis. The Oceanside Bike Fest begins and ends at the Duxbury Middle School and travels through South Shore communities including Marshfield, Scituate, Cohasset, and Carver. The tour offers routes of 25, 50 and 100 miles and is a family-friendly event that attracts bike riders of all abilities.

Leading the Bike Fest will be Tour de France cyclist Tyler Hamilton, a member of the U.S. Postal Service Cycling Team and Mt. Washington hill climb record holder. Hamilton, chairman of the MS Cycling Series, personally knows the challenges faced by people living with multiple sclerosis, a chronic often disabling disease of the central nervous system. Progress is being made in MS research and by riding in the Oceanside Bike Fest, you will keep the momentum going.

Bike Fest participants raise funds for the Central New England Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society to further its mission to end the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis. The National MS Society supports MS research and local programs for people with MS and their families. Multiple sclerosis affects a third of a million people in the U.S. and 10,000 individuals and families in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, the area served by the Central New England Chapter.

To register for the Oceanside Bike Fest or to find out more about multiple sclerosis and the National MS Society, call 800-493-9255.

generates into a thank-you note. There is no possible way that I could have, would have, written these articles without help from dozens of people. I owe them thanks, so please indulge me.

Coaches Ford, Hall, Knurek, Rolfe, Silvia, Sweeney and more have all been generous and patient with me. They've watched as I've bumbled through, having absolutely no idea what I'm doing. They've given me great opportunities and insights and have made things easy.

Joe Reardon, Dave Wolcott, Andy Mahoney, and Mike Hardman have prevented me from embarrassing myself in print. They've edited what I'm sure have been some atrocious writing and they also have been patient with a high school kid who, five years later, still has only the slightest clue about how to do this job the right way.

Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Alcott, Mrs. Magoun, Mrs. Wood, Mr. Leary, Mr. Kite, Mr. Emmons. Since first grade, I've had a string of exceptional English teachers, men and women who taught me how to write. Any time I may have achieved literary competence in these pages is a testament to their talent.

When I was in junior high, the athletes whom I covered would tower over me. I looked up to those guys both literally and figuratively, and very few of them ever gave me reason not to do the latter.

Guys like Pete Bishop, Dorian Bryant, Greg Stevens, Brian Riley, Ryan Bishop, Grant Emde, to name only a few, were great to me. Later, as the athletes were my age, it was fun to report about my buddy Jamie DeMichele carrying the basketball team or the wrestling team posting an enormously successful season.

Who knows how many times the noise of the keyboard or the printer kept my parents from sleeping. Countless Tuesday nights saw me burning the midnight oil to make a deadline (if I were to choose one word to describe my journalistic style, "procrastination" would be a likely candidate.)

They've edited, chauffeured, faxed, reminded, encouraged. Even disregarding the fact that they are marvelous parents, what they've done in helping me with this has been truly extraordinary.

Finally, thanks to Mrs. Niessink for telling me about the job in the first place.

I believe it was Gay Talese who referred to sportswriters as "ink-stained wretches." For five years, I have been one of these, or at least imitated one.

It's great to discuss columns with people, to see my words in print, and to write about people I know. It's also been five years since I paid to attend a high school sporting event, which is why I took the job in the first place.

It's been a humbling, deeply educational, fun experience. I regret few moments of it, although sometimes at three o'clock on a Wednesday morning I questioned my sanity.

I must say that one of my happiest moments was the day I opened the paper and found that they had stopped using that awful picture of me at the top of the column (the one from eighth grade with that cow shirt and my ridiculously forced smile.)

While attending Boston College, hopefully, I can still send in an article from time to time. A surprising number of CHS athletes go on to play college sports at one level or another, and I'd like to maybe write some "where are they now?"-type pieces about some of them.

There are a lot of games to cover and many athletes who have never been subjected to my rather awkward interviewing methods.

Thanks for reading. Go Blue.

Reports of elder abuse rising on South Shore

only amount of money allocated to protective services, rather than having the extra $1 million which would have been provided by the tobacco monies added to the total.

Certain caseworkers agree that not enough money has been allocated toward protective services programs, but they still enjoy their jobs despite all the trials and tribulations.

"We all enjoy the challenges of problem solving and resolving crisis," said Dorothy Crane, a caseworker at Old Colony Elder Services. "But yes, we're underpaid. Sometimes, it's like society doesn't even recognize what we do. If we were in the computer field, we'd probably be making millions, but we're in the business of saving lives."

"The whole field of social services is underpaid," said Theresa Kourtz, another caseworker at Old Colony. "But I've always wanted to help people, and there's a lot of gratification that goes along with it."

Money also presents some challenges of another kind. Nearly 14 percent of all the cases investigated by authorities actually involve financial exploitation of the elderly.

A case in Norwell dating back to 1989 illustrates the magnitude of the problem, officials say.

An elderly woman with Parkinson's disease who had a fear of being placed in a nursing home hired a part-time housekeeper. Months after she was hired, the housekeeper had the elderly woman's VNA home health services taken away and moved into the elder's home with her husband and four children.

Sources said eventually, the housekeeper began blocking visits from the elderly woman's friends and family. In addition, the housekeeper and her family started to take expensive cruises and ski trips and making costly renovations to the elder's home. All costs were at the expense of the elderly woman.

Moreover, the housekeeper and her husband found an attorney who drafted a new will and a trust for the elderly woman. In addition, the lawyer transferred the power of attorney from an out-of-state niece of the elderly woman to the housekeeper.

Within a period of two years, the elderly woman died, and the housekeeper was discovered to be the beneficiary of her estate. At that time, reports of drugs obtained illegally in the elderly woman's name surfaced.

After a long legal battle, a court overturned the will and the trust naming the housekeeper as the beneficiary, but many questions remained.

"We're seeing more financial exploitation in a lot of cases these days," Fielding said. "Those are sometimes easier to prove because there's a paper trail. For elders, financial exploitation can be the most devastating form of abuse."

"Early detection is one of the keys to prevention," Fielding said of financial abuse.

But sometimes, incidents of abuse are hard to detect, as Boyce found out when a mysterious instance in Kingston occurred.

Boyce said an elderly woman used to call her at the Council on Aging on a frequent basis, constantly inquiring what she could do about abuse, and where she could get help. Boyce always tried to counsel her over the phone, and gave her various numbers of help agencies.

However, the elderly woman never gave her name to Boyce, and always seemed to be on edge.

Boyce said one day, the woman called again, sounding especially disturbed, asking her the same questions, but ended the conversation abruptly, saying to Boyce, "I'll call you tomorrow."

"She never called tomorrow," Boyce said grimly. After Boyce had not heard from the woman for some time, she tracked down the phone caller through records and interviews around Kingston. She eventually found a number which she had reason to believe was that of the elderly woman in question.

When Boyce called the number, a familiar elderly woman's voice picked up the phone, and when Boyce identified herself, and questioned her about the phone calls, the woman denied ever talking to Boyce or asking for guidance.

"I still have no way of knowing if this was a serious abuse situation," Boyce said.

Boyce said she feels that instances such as the one with the elderly phone caller could be avoided if Councils on Aging would be incorporated more into the protective services system. She said that usually, once an abuse case is discovered at the Council on Aging level, the case is immediately transferred to a higher level of the protective services department such as elder services branches.

"I would like to work with them more," she said. "We'd have more power in numbers, and would be able to protect these people better. The line of communication is not as open as it should be. The door is only swinging one way. Once a case goes to an agency, it's lost [to Councils on Aging]."

"I'd like to have more of a role," Conolly said in support of Boyce's claims. "We're the ones that these people call first. We interact on a daily basis. If we could work together more, it would be a way to maximize support for elders through Councils on Aging and elder services."

Conolly added that because of the lack of communication, sometimes when cases are referred to elder services, the workers at given Councils on Aging do not even know if elder services "opened or closed certain cases."

Reaching a boiling point

Taking care of elderly leads some caregivers over the edge

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

It generally boils down to frustration.

That's what many experts say is the root cause of elderly abuse. As people continue to live longer and become more dependent on family members, frustration often builds as the need for care becomes more intense.

Alan Gruber, a psychologist from Neuro Behavioral Associates in Hingham who works out of South Shore Hospital, agrees it all comes down to frustration with and the misunderstanding of the aging process.

"People attempt to care for the elderly mostly in the home," Gruber said, "but they don't understand what the person they're caring for is going through. In turn, they become very frustrated, and that frustration leads to a lot of elderly abuse. Some people may not mean it, but they tend to get very impatient. They can't tolerate [a given elderly person's] repetitive nature. It really has to do with a lack of understanding."

In addition to a lack of understanding, a vast chunk of abuse has to do with the abusers having problems related to drugs and alcohol, Gruber noted.

He said that most caretakers who do not seek assistance will most likely experience frustration, and he stressed that if various caretakers came to terms with the process of aging, elderly abuse incidents would likely decrease.

"Aging is not a disease," he continued. "Most people age gracefully, but some age with a lot of problems. The great shame is that [caretakers] don't seek assistance when they see these changes. The fact is, if you treat the disease, the frustration ceases, and the situation calms down. It's the diseases associated with aging that prompt frustration, not just growing old."

Like other officials involved in the crusade against elderly abuse, Gruber agreed that instances involving physical, neglectful, emotional, and financial abuse are rising. He said he sees victims of abuse at South Shore Hospital "several times a month."

Although Gruber said he never gets involved in investigations of abuse, he noted that more and more caretakers and the elders for whom they are caring are showing up in his office to try to understand the problems surrounding aging.

"It's a good sign," he said. "We're seeing many more [caretakers with their patients]. More caretakers are saying 'I don't want to feel this way. I'm scaring myself.' They are realizing that there's a problem and that they have no understanding of it."

"Abusers are carrying the weight of the world on their shoulders," added Muriel Boyce, director of the Kingston COA. "Sometimes, the abusers just don't understand. They're living with it everyday."

Marshfield COA Director Carol Conolly says caretakers also have to take care of themselves. "Who takes care of the caretaker? They're isolated themselves. We want to encourage caretakers to come forward, and not to feel guilty about it. A lot of people feel the way they do. If they have understanding, it will help eliminate the problem."

She added that the Marshfield Council on Aging is "applying for a grant for a caregiver's support group in order to arm people with information before they get burnt out or frustrated."

Experts say no caretaker is immune to the frustration that caring for an elder can sometimes cause, and every caretaker is capable of abusive actions. They say it's possible for anyone to find themselves in a situation and urges people to spot any potential warning signs.

Meanwhile, there are various agencies monitoring the problem, trying to make it better. The people closest to the incidents of abuse are the caseworkers, who find the work to be sometimes disturbing but always gratifying.

"It's hard," said Theresa Kourtz, a case worker at Old Colony Elder Services in Brockton. "In this line of work, you have to have an emotional investment. We use our team a lot to support each other. It's a tough situation, but you have to put it in check and go beyond emotion. It's just the nature of the job. But if you're going into a tough situation in this business, you know you're not doing it alone."

In addition to the local level, the state Executive Office of Elder Affairs is establishing further improvements in the overall system for the future.

"Elder Affairs' efforts to strengthen the protective services system in Massachusetts will continue," according to a recently released state report on elder abuse. "However, there are some needs which cannot be addressed without the availability of additional resources for the protective services program."

Some of those needs include increased protective services staffing, examining pay increases for certain protective services staff, improving staff training and community education, and increasing the staff responsible for monitoring the elder abuse hotline.

"Since 1984," said Lillian Glickman, state Secretary of Elder Affairs said, "the (the Elder Affairs office) has run a statewide protective services program that includes 24 local protective services agencies and a round-the-clock toll-free hotline. Early detection and reporting are key to responding effectively to elder abuse. Suspected cases of abuse must be identified and conveyed to protective services as early as possible."

The number of the toll free elder abuse hotline is 1-800-922-2275.

the level to which the community goes to make sure that the students are successful."

Malvey said the biggest issue facing the future of the schools is to commit enough money to education to ensure that students continue to be successful.

"We have to maintain the level of commitment in financial resources to public education," he said. "The amount of financial resources may determine whether Cohasset can continue to improve and rank among the top school systems in the state. It's a serious issue. It sounds trite, but that will be the chief concern as we approach the new millennium."

Upgrading the school facilities at Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle-High School is also a major issue facing the district, but Malvey said he hoped a 60 percent state reimbursement would make the upgrades palatable to voters come Town Meeting time.

Getting more money from the state for education is a priority that is Malvey said is shared by Cohasset and many other towns throughout the Commonwealth.

"We're going to lobby on the state level," he said. "Hopefully, our legislators on Beacon Hill will listen and get something done.

While increasing state aid for education is a priority throughout Massachusetts, school safety is an issue that seems to register on the nation's consciousness. Malvey said that events such as the Columbine shootings have led school officials in Cohasset to take action.

"In this day and age, students will follow through on threats, as we have unfortunately seen," he said. "Although Cohasset has always run safe schools, the time has come to pay attention to the danger and make sure you're prepared."

He said that he and staff members at all the Cohasset public schools have been reviewing and updating their plans to prevent a dire situation from occurring.

"We've made sure that we have open lines of communication with the fire and police departments, we'll be more attentive to youngsters with problems, we're going to monitor hallways, and be especially attentive to visitors," he said. "You're in a fishbowl when you're in a public place."

While preparing for the worst is a sobering aspect of the job, Malvey said that his experiences during his first year as superintendent have been almost exclusively positive.

"The people in Cohasset have been absolutely outstanding," he said. "People are involved in the schools, but they're also concerned with the quality of life in the town as a whole. Everyone wants the kids to do well, and its shown in the MCAS scores, which are among the top in the state."

IT'S HAPPENING

Quit and stay quit

The South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program is sponsoring a free stop smoking program that provides you with practical information and strategies that will assist you in becoming a successful ex-smoker.

The program includes:

Σ Introductory session with no obligation.

Σ A behavioral approach to quitting.

Σ Nutrition and weight control information.

Σ Stress management/relaxation techniques training.

Σ Three sessions of group hypnotherapy.

It takes place Monday, Sept. 13 from 6 to 7:30 p.m. at the Tobacco Control program office in Hanover. Class size will be limited to 20 participants, and pre-registration is required.

For more information, call 781-829-4301

League of Women Voters membership drive

The League of Women Voters of Hingham is holding a millenium membership drive, and inviting men and women age 18 and over to join and make a difference.

The League of Women Voters sponsors local and regional candidates nights, voter registration drives, voters guides, recycling and hazardous waste education, and the annual beach clean-up Coast Sweep. The League has always taken a pro-active stand, after thorough research, on such issues as public education, casino gambling, transportation and clean elections.

For the first time ever, a woman is running for president; special interests and big business are donating huge sums to legislators on all levels; political campaigns are won by candidates who raise the most money. Join the League and make a difference. Be part of a vibrant non-partisan organization that encourages political participation, but does not promote any political party or candidate.

Please call Helga Jorgensen at (781) 749-4826 for information.

Annual benefit clambake

The Christine Burke Scholarship Fund clambake, sponsored by George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 is Saturday, Sept. 11, noon to sunset (rain date is Sept. 12) at Sandy Beach, Cohasset.

There will be live entertainment by the Irish Volunteers. A tax-deductible donation of $30 per person is required. Dinner will be served at 3 p.m.

Checks are payable to American Legion Post 118 and mailed to George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118, c/o Mr. Duncan McCormack, 88 Summer St., Cohasset 02050.

Please indicate whether the tickets should be mailed to you or if you will pick them up at the clambake.

Red Sox outing planned

The South Shore Community Center in Cohasset is hosting a "Last Hurrah of Summer" Red Sox family outing to Fenway Park on Monday, Aug. 30.

A pre-game get together and hot dogs and soda will begin at the SSCC parking lot at 5 p.m. Buses will be provided and will be leaving the center at 5:45 p.m.

The game time is 7 p.m. as the Sox will challenge the Kansas City Royals. Ticket price of $20 per person includes the pre-game get together, bus transportation to and from the game (no parking hassle!) and of course, the family fun and excitement of seeing live-action baseball at Fenway. All seats are on the first base line, in the grand stands. Please call SSCC at 383-0088 for tickets, or stop in Monday through Thursday, between 9 and 11 a.m.

Unicorn Singers auditioning new members

The Unicorn Singers, the South Shore's most unique chamber chorus, is auditioning for new members.

A number of the singers have backgrounds in musical theater, or are gifted instrumentalists. Many are soloists at area churches and director Margo Euler says she likes to use the full range of abilities of chorus members.

Prospective members should be strong singers, have music reading ability and lots of energy! To arrange an audition, call 749-6561 or 749-7890.

South Shore Children's chorus

Calling all children who love to sing! Plans are currently underway for the 1999-2000 season of Junior Voices and Crickets, a popular South Shore children's choral program incorporating music reading instruction and performance.

Both groups are under the direction of Margo Euler and will meet Wednesday afternoons at Wilder Hall in South Hingham, Crickets from 3:45-4:40 p.m. and JVs from 4:15-5:30 p.m.

For registration instructions or more information, call Lynn Anderson at 749-9759.

Minot featured on lighthouse cruise

The Boston Harbor Explorers, a non-profit organization, announce the final Lighthouse Cruise Extravaganza which is scheduled for Saturday, Sept. 4. The tour features 12-15 lighthouses, including Boston Light, Graves Ledge, the Twin Lights off Cape Ann, Eastern Point Light, Hospital Point Light, Marblehead Light, dangerous Minot's Ledge Light and many more.

The six-hour narrated cruise also focuses on the many historic events which took place in Boston Harbor including legendary sea battles, deadly shipwrecks and dramatic sea rescues.

Tickets are available now for the Lighthouse Cruise Extravaganza and can be purchased by sending a check or money order to Boston Harbor Explorers, Inc., P.O. Box 690744, Quincy 02269.

Tickets are $30 for adults, $26 for seniors, $20 for children., or call the Explorers at (617) 479-1871 for additional information.

Boarding begins at Rowes Wharf at 9:30 a.m. sharp, the boat departs at 10 a.m. and returns to Rowes Wharf at 4 p.m.

Piano lessons resume

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson-schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano. For more information, call 383-1487.

Lt. Governor Swift honored at cookout

Lt. Governor Jane Swift and State GOP Chairman Brian Cresta will be honored at the annual Cohasset cookout to be held Sunday, Aug. 29 from 4:30 to 7 p.m. at the seaside home of Ted and Julie Guild.

A native of North Adams, Swift became the youngest woman ever elected to the Massachusetts Senate and rose to the rank of assistant minority leader, again the youngest woman in senate history to serve in either party's leadership. In 1996 Swift ran in the 1st Congressional District and finished closer than any other GOP congressional candidate in the state. Governor Weld appointed her director of Regional Development of Massachusetts Authority, and in December she served as director of state office of Consumer Affairs and Business Regulation. Swift and Governor Cellucci were elected in November 1998.

State party chair and representative of Wakefield, Middleton and Precincts 1, 3 and 4 of Lynnfield first was elected in 1994, re-elected in 1996; and in 1998 by 77 percent, Cresta also was elected selectman of Wakefield at the age of 21 in 1991. The youngest selectman ever elected in the history of Wakefield, Cresta serves as a member of Joint Committee on Housing and Urban Development, Insurance, ranking minority member on Transportation and Science and Technology and in 1999 was named a member of powerful House Ways and Means Committee.

Other special guests are Senator and Weymouth Mayoral Candidate Bob Hedlund, GOP House Leader Fran Marini of Hansen, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset, Sheriff Peter Forman of Plymouth, D.A. Mike Sullivan of Abington, Rep. Vinny Demacedo of Plymouth and County Commissioner Robert Stone of Whitman.

Open to the public, especially residents of Norfolk, Plymouth, Barnstable, Bristol Counties but reservations are required. RSVP 781-383-0031.

Dream house turns into nightmare

Family at wit's end trying to build a home in Cohasset

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Think about the most important decisions one makes in his or her life. There are really only a few. Deciding upon a career, finding a husband or wife to spend one's life with, deciding to have children, these are the choices that govern the life that a person will lead. An equally important decision is choosing where to live because parents want to find a town with good schools and a safe, nurturing environment. Building a house in such a town is truly the American dream.

Anthony and Helaine Nader of Quincy thought Cohasset was that town and bought a 2.6-acre property at 59 Beechwood Street on which they planned to build a home for them and their three children. However, only the foundation and some framing has been completed a year later because of a suspended building permit and a denial of the project by the town's conservation commis-

Elm Street project halted

Grant not awarded to Cohasset

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

In the words of William Shakespeare, it appears that the debate regarding the proposed $230,000 Elm Street walkway is indeed much ado about nothing. A grant application for state funding was not recommended by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, which in effect kills the proposal for the upcoming fiscal year. Had the town been awarded the grant, the state would have paid 90 percent of the cost of the project. Without that funding, the project is a fiscal impossibility.

Some residents of Elm Street had been busily gathering signatures for petitions and writing letters to town officials to voice their displeasure about the project, which was the brainchild of the Village Revitalization Task Force.

The project had called for the town to replace the concrete sidewalk with red brick, put peninsulas along the right side of the road from the village to the harbor, and plant a canopy of

Sewer may spell end to empty lots

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Have your kids grown up being able to explore the woods or play in the lot next door with sheer abandon? Or have you simply enjoyed not having any neighbors?

That would no longer be the case if homes are built on those empty parcels of land that are peppered around town..

The Central Cohasset Sewer District is being extended to include the Hillside section of town. Building inspector Bob Egan counts a minimum of ten empty lots in that area that he foresees could be developed once the sewer line is in. That's because these lots are too small to incorporate a

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Corrections are noted

A headline in last week's Mariner should have said "Operator of former golf range across from JJ's pitches Driftway driving course." The headline mistakenly said "former owner of JJ's."

Hazardous waste collections scheduled

Cohasset residents may attend the HHW collections listed below with the written permission of the Dept. Of Public Works. Permission is not required if the collection is in the resident's hometown. All attendees must provide proof of residency. The town of residence is responsible for the cost.

The following hazardous waste collections are scheduled:

Sept. 18, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Cohasset, DPW Garage on Cedar Street.

Sept. 25, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Marshfield, to be announced.

Oct. 16, 9 a.m. to noon, Hingham, Plymouth River School on High Street.

Oct. 23, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Norwell, Highway Garage on Route 123.

Residents wishing to attend should call the DPW, board of health or the South Shore Recycling Cooperative at 508-785-8318 for a list of acceptable and unacceptable substances, permission and directions. Latex paint is not a hazardous waste. Quantities are limited to 15 gallons or 30 lbs. of material per car. Commercial "Very Small Quantity Generators" may call ahead and dispose of materials for a fee at some events.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Sept. 14.

Open space volunteers

The Open Space and Recreation Committee is looking for two members to help revise and update Cohasset's Open Space and Recreation Plan, and also to help implement the open space and recreation goals outlined in the report. Anyone who is action-oriented, and wants to help improve Cohasset's open space and recreation opportunities, is welcome to apply. Call Debbie Cook, chairman, at 383-6313.

Flood project springs a leak

Broken valve slows construction at the Cove

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

For residents who live near the construction site nearKimball's By the Sea, the James Brook flood abatement project can not proceed quickly enough. Though residents and business owners in the area understand that the nuisance is a necessary evil in that it will help to prevent future floods, there is a perception among many that the project is moving along sluggishly.

"It seems to be going very slowly, but I guess you have to live with that," said Hamilton Tewksbury, 81 Elm St.

According to Domenic Tutela, the engineer hired by the town for the flood abatement project, construction workers hit a snag when a busted water valve put a temporary halt to the project.

"When we found the busted valve, we got permission from the water commissioner to shut it down," he said. "The new valve should be in any day now which will let us get back to work. These things happen, but you don't know what's there until you dig in the ground."

Tutela said the busted valve is not the only difficulty which workers encountered when they ventured underground.

"It's been pretty bad down there," he said. "There was a stone culvert which had to be replaced with reinforced concrete and the existing tide gates were leaking like a sieve. We replaced those as well."

The work being done at the cove is only the first part of a larger project designed to greatly enhance the town's ability to control flooding. Ninety percent of the $1 million project is funded by the federal government, with the town contributing the other ten percent. Work will also be done near the post office, which will allow water to drain out more efficiently.

"Just the other day we had clients in the office trying to book a trip to Bermuda and the electricity went out and we had to leave. I just hope it gets over soon, but as far as I know it's still going to be a few months."

— Kristen Curran, owner of Global Travel, 97 Elm St.

"The workers at the cove are widening the pipes, which will increase capacity by 60 percent," Tutela said. "The increased capacity will allow more water to pass through at the other end."

Tutela said that, barring any catastrophes, work at the cove could hopefully be completed by the end of October. That date cannot come soon enough for Kristen Curran, owner of Global Travel, 97 Elm St., which is directly across from the construction.

Work on the town's flood control project at the cove near Kimball's has been halted temporarily due to a busted water valve.

"The construction is definitely causing a problem," she said. "We've had our electricity and our phones go out. There are tractors digging within a foot of the building and our workers are having trouble getting in and out."

Curran said that she has not been informed regarding the status of the project and has spoken to Town Manager Mark Haddad about the difficulties her business has encountered as a result.

"Just the other day we had clients in the office trying to book a trip to Bermuda and the electricity went out and we had to leave. I just hope it gets over soon, but as far as I know it's still going to be a few months."

Tewksbury said that the Kimball's end of Elm Street, which has been blocked off due to the construction, should be opened when there is not work occurring.

"When they work, I understand why they block the traffic," he said. "But it would be nice if they would leave the road open as much as possible during the weekends and in the evening when they're not working," he said. "Someone always moves the barriers anyway. There's no reason not to take them down."

Work near the post office will commence immediately following the completion of construction at the cove. Tutela said he hopes to be done at the post office by the end of the year.

Together, the cove and post office projects should significantly ease residents concerns about flooding.

"The project as a whole is going to keep the incidences of flooding to a minimum," he said. "The whole system had been clogged and broken down and the water couldn't get out of there. This will allow the water to drain much more freely."

CHL assignment hearings could begin on Sept. 8

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The end is near. Not the end of the world, but possibly the end of the site assignment that allows the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill to operate in Cohasset. The board of health will open site assignment hearings for CHL on Sept. 8 beginning at 7 p.m. in town hall. The site assignment is the chief local authorization that allows landfills to operate within a town. Landfills cannot legally operate without a valid site assignment. Currently, CHL still has a site assignment for its landfill. If the board of health rescinds CHL's current site assignment, then the company cannot re-open the existing landfill.

But there's a catch. Since 1995, CHL has been seeking state authorization for a major expansion into an unused portion of the landfill known as Area V. The board of health rejected the original Area V expansion, and CHL appealed the decision in court. Ultimately, CHL lost in court and exhausted all appeals on July 14, 1999. The next day, CHL filed a Notice of Project Change With the state, beginning the permitting process for a revised expansion into Area V. Revoking the site assignment will close down the existing landfill permanently, but will not prevent CHL from seeking a new expansion of Area V.

"The only way to prevent landfills from being proposed again and again in Area V is to change the zoning of that area from light industrial to something else," said John K. McNabb Jr., chairman of the water commission and vice president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE). "But we want people to know that the site assignment hearings for the current landfill are on for Sept. 8."

McNabb said that Town Manager Mark Haddad will serve as the hearing officer for the site assignment discussion. SAFE will also ask 18 10-citizens groups that oppose the landfill to once again consolidate under one umbrella. SAFE President Kevin O'Donnell will speak on behalf of 18 10-citizen groups protesting the landfill, if the groups choose to consolidate. Residents can also speak at the hearings.

But CHL attorney Anton Moehrke said the issue should be resolved short of a hearing.

"We are now in a situation where we're evaluating whether there is any need to contest a hearing because we have no plans to resume operations at the landfill," he said. "CHL would like to take the resources it has and put them into proper closure of the facility."

Moehrke said CHL views any plans to open Area V as "an entirely unrelated matter" to the site assignment hearing.

The last time the town had site assignment hearings for CHL was in 1996 when the health board rejected the Area V expansion. Those hearings lasted 19 days. McNabb said he is optimistic that the Sept. 8 hearing could begin and end on the same night.

The health board can revoke, modify or suspend CHL's site assignment if there is clear evidence that the landfill results in a threat to public health and the environment. McNabb said the health board can site several conditions that threaten the public health or the environment.

Revoking the site assignment will close down the existing landfill permanently, but will not prevent CHL from seeking a new expansion of Area V.

"Take your pick," McNabb said. "There's the damage to the wetlands. There's the illegal fill in Area IV-B. There's the 100 tons of illegal material on the slopes. There's the confirmation by Norfolk Environmental of water-bearing bedrock fractures under the landfill that may be carrying leachate from CHL toward Brass Kettle Brook and Lily Pond. The list goes on."

Moehrke said CHL "does not concede any of those things."

McNabb said that on Aug. 17, Moehrke met with Haddad, SAFE, and Town Counsel Paul DeRensis to discuss a possible deal in which CHL would give up its site assignment voluntarily and waive its right to an appeal.

"SAFE drafted an agreement to that effect, and sent it to CHL," McNabb said. "But we got it back with some significant changes. CHL tried to turn the pre-conference into a mini-deal, but then expanded their agenda later. They put in a condition that would not require them to remove any of the waste already there, including the illegal material. Also, they wanted the board of health not to make a determination that the landfill is a threat to the town. These were big loopholes that we couldn't allow."

Moehrke said discussions were the normal part of the settlement process that includes "give and take" between competing proposals.

McNabb said he is not opposed to a deal as long as it doesn't release CHL of its legal obligations to close the landfill properly.

CHL has been closed since July, 1998. In late 1997, McNabb discovered that CHL had never filed a special permit to operate from the town with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. Failure to file the permit meant the landfill had never operated legally. Also, it meant that CHL was in violation of the town's water protection bylaw, passed after CHL began operating. The bylaw prohibits landfills from operating within a designated district. A major portion of CHL sits within the water protection district. Although CHL is attempting to expand Area V again, it is not clear whether the new expansion would be prohibited by the water protection bylaw. The town ordered CHL to cease operations because it lacked a special permit. CHL appealed the decision, but a Norfolk Superior Court judge upheld the town's position.

McNabb is urging resident to contact Governor Paul Cellucci and request a full environmental review for the latest Area V expansion proposal.

"People should contact Governor Cellucci by Sept. 8 to make sure that Environmental Affairs Secretary Robert Durand requires CHL to do a new Environmental Impact Report for the Notice of Project Change (EOEA 7223) on their Area V expansion," McNabb said.

Residents can e-mail Cellucci at Goffice@state.ma.us, call him at (617)727-6250, fax him at (617)727-9725, or mail a letter to Governor Paul Cellucci, State House, Boston, MA 02133.

Town loses bid for Elm Street grant elm trees to give the street a more small-town feel.

"It's gratifying to see that the grant did not come through," said Valerie Lipsett, one of the residents most fervently against the project. "Without much public input, I'm amazed that it proceeded as far as it did."

Lipsett and some other residents were upset that they were not able to voice all of their concerns before the grant application went ahead, but task force chairman Dean Rizzo had said repeatedly that it was premature to hold public forums before the decision on the grant was handed down.

"Had we gotten the grant, we would have held a number of public forums and everyone would have been heard," he said. "The opportunity is still there, however, and we can apply next year. We'll discuss it as a task force and with abutters and come up with the best decision based on a consensus."

Rizzo said that he was not surprised that Cohasset did not receive the grant this year, because of the limited funds which they spent on the application.

"The town put in $500, but that was money that was left over from a previous grant. In that sense, it didn't cost the town anything. With the limited amount that we spent, we knew that we were short on drawings and engineering."

"Had we gotten the grant, we would have held a number of public forums and everyone would have been heard."

— Dean Rizzo, task force chairman

The MAPC only selected 5 of the 11 applications for the grant as worthy of state funding for fiscal year 2000. Cohasset received points for the goals of the project but faltered when it came to design plans.

"It was good to see that we fulfilled the program requirements, and thanks to [local architect] Jim Shipsky we were able to produce quite a bit of drawings given our limited funds. If we apply again, we know what we'll have to improve upon."

Rizzo said that the initial grant proposal for the St. Stephen's Church walkway was also denied, but was accepted the following year.

Lipsett, however, is not thrilled at the prospect of another grant application for a proposal for which she does not see the benefit for the town.

"I'm always willing to discuss something," she said, "but I honestly just don't see the need for it. I don't see it benefiting anyone but perhaps some tourists."

Eventually, the goal of the task force is to have the Elm Street walkway connect with a proposed Harbor walkway that would create a well-defined pedestrian link between the village and the harbor.

Rizzo said that even though the task force's master plan is to merge the two projects, the rejection of the Elm Street grant application does not reduce the viability of the harbor walkway.

"In no way is the harbor walk project inhibited by not getting the grant," he said. "The harbor walk is a completely independent project. Everything can really be segmented out."

Sewer may spell end to empty lots

septic system under today's environmental codes, but the sewer makes them buildable.

In anticipation of some interest in the lots, Egan has drafted a letter to town counsel to make sure the building commissioner's office is interpreting the town's zoning by-law correctly.

"I want to make sure we're on the same page," he said.

Egan explained that lots in the Hillside area, which is zoned "Residence A" must be a minimum of 18.000 square feet under the current zoning by-law. The lots in question are smaller than that but were in place prior to 1985 when the zoning law changed. Prior to 1985, the lots in the district had to be a minimum of 12,000 square feet.

"Our zoning law s more liberal than the state's," Egan explained. "The state sets a time limit but our by-law reads if it was a comforming lot at the time it was created, it is protected."

Dan Couglin of Tutela Engineering, sewer project manager, said as long as the lots are adjacent to the sewer line, they can be hooked up. He said the sewer commission decided, however, that each lot could only have a single service hookup to conserve capacity. So if someone had 40 acres for example with 100 feet of frontage, the owner would still only be allowed one service hookup, he said.

"It's not a big deal unless it's beside your house and your dog walks on it"

— building inspector Bob Egan

"As long as it's a buildable lot, a single service connection would be allowed," Coughlin said. He said a service stub on the street for those properties will be provided in anticipation of construction.

When fully upgraded, the sewer treatment plant will have a capacity of 300,000 gallons per day. Currently, it's capacity is 72,000 gallons per day.

Egan is not expecting a hue and cry about future development of these lots. But he foresees that some of the abutters – who may have been told when they bought their homes that nothing could be built next door – might be upset.

"It's not a big deal unless it's beside your house and your dog walks on it," Egan said.

New Cohasset computer teacher logs on Starts 'dream job' in middle school lab

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A perception exists among many which says that those who go into teaching when they are right out of college may eventually get burned out and seek other professions. Very infrequently is there much discussion of that burnout happening in reverse. However, there are those who become disenchanted with the business world and decide to take what they've learned into the classroom and share it with students.

New middle school computer applications teacher Kristine O'Connor has such a story. After spending 25 years as a technology instructor with the Consolidated Rail Corporation [ConRail], O'Connor decided to share her knowledge with students rather than business people.

"The company was rumored to be taken over, and a generous buyout was offered. I had always wanted to teach young people and so I jumped at the chance."

O'Connor said that she had wanted to be a teacher when she graduated from college, but found that teaching positions were few and far between.

"When I got out of school, it was really hard to find work as a teacher," she said. "A lot of the changes that have been made as far as reducing class sizes hadn't come in yet. I needed a job and so I went to ConRail."

O'Connor started her career in Boston and was later transferred to Springfield, where she became an office manager. While at that job, she noticed that word processors were starting to phase out typewriters and saw a future which would be heavily influenced by computers.

"I got excited about the potential I saw with computers and how they could automate tasks and make people more productive," she said. "I volunteered to make a career change and show employees throughout the company how to better integrate technology into their daily tasks."

From Springfield, she was transferred to Albany, NY, and Philadelphia. When the buyout came, she and her husband would have had to relocate to Jacksonville, Fla., or Atlanta. Neither was a move they were prepared to make and so she accepted the buyout.

Her initial dream of being a teacher came rushing back months later when she saw an advertisement for a master's program. The ad encouraged those with computer experience to apply for a grant to attend a master's program at Temple University in Philadelphia. She was awarded the grant and completed her master's degree in Instructional Technology.

From there, O'Connor began her teaching career in Hanover, where she has taught technology in that town's elementary schools for the last two years.

"We did beginning reading and writing programs as well as teaching the kids how to access multimedia encyclopedias," she said.

With the increased resources being devoted to technology in Cohasset schools, the position of computer applications teacher was created, and O'Connor seized the opportunity.

"Truthfully, I told my husband that this is it, this is my dream job," she said. "This is a great age level, great software, and Cohasset is doing everything the right way when it comes to technology. The new lab is state-of-the-art. I'm just glad I get to be a part of all this. It's really exciting."

Teacher Kristine O'Connor in her new computer classroom.

The brand-new lab features 36 computers, which will all be networked together, along with printers and scanners. In addition, the computers are all equipped with Microsoft Office 2000 software, the latest available for word processing, spreadsheets, creating multimedia presentations, and designing web pages.

"It's exciting to know that the tasks they'll learn here are the same ones that they'll use in high school, college, and the business world," O'Connor said. "The kids need to learn how to use those tools."

O'Connor said that the first half of the new computer applications class will be used to teach the students how to use the Office 2000 software and find out what they know.

"The bar is constantly being raised as far as what the kids can do with computers," she said. "The first step for me is to find out what computer skills the students already have."

The second half of the class will be devoted to the integration of the computer skills in the students' everyday class work.

"I'll teach them how to do Power Point presentations, do research projects online and add pictures and graphics into their reports," she said while sprucing up the new lab. "I can't wait for school to begin."

We'll make you smile.

School renovation plans to be refined

Five options will be studied

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

At a joint meeting of the school committee and the school facilities committee last Wednesday night, members of both committees decided to focus upon five possible options for school renovations. Architects from Strekalovsky and Hoit of Hingham, the firm hired by the town to draw up renovation plans for Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle High School, were asked to dismiss two of the seven options previously discussed at the Aug. 23 school committee meeting.

Removed from consideration was a proposal that would have created a 6-8 grade middle school at Osgood, which would have involved putting grades K-5 at Deer Hill. That proposal would have involved a large addition to Deer Hill as well as significant modifications at the Osgood school. Significant alterations at Osgood are unpopular with school committee members because the school was opened only last year at a cost of $10 million.

"Osgood is built for little people," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "All of the tables and desks are built for children as well as the hallways and bathrooms. It was easy to see that that option was not a feasible one."

Also removed from further consideration was a proposal that would create two similar elementary schools in town. In that proposal, both Osgood and Deer Hill would become K-5 elementary schools, while the sixth grade would move from Deer Hill to the Middle High School. Creating two separate elementary schools which serve the same grades would create districting issues, which would likely become difficult because the two schools lie in such close proximity to each other.

Of the five remaining options, that which seems the most unlikely is one that would involve building an entirely new middle school. Because the school would have to be built on an as yet unspecified parcel of land, the cost of simply acquiring the land could make a new middle school prohibitively expensive.

"The school committee feels that there is no real chance for a new middle school, but there's no extra cost for Strekalovsky and Hoit to research the additional option," DeGiacomo said. "It might be useful to find out what it would have cost."

DeGiacomo said that the architects will be asked to determine the cost of all five options as well as their chances for gaining state funding.

"We've asked the architects to cost out all of the options and come up with a ballpark figure," he said. "We also asked them to comment on the likelihood of state reimbursement for each option, because the ability to get money from the state will inevitably play a large role in the decision."

The state may fund 60 percent of the renovations, but only if the school district can demonstrate that those renovations fulfill one of two criteria. The renovations must fulfill specified program goals or must be done in order to meet the additional demand caused by increased enrollment.

One of the five remaining options would be to simply perform infrastructure repairs on Deer Hill and CMHS. Due to the dilapidated state of the Deer Hill and CMHS physical plants, those repairs will undoubtedly be costly. As DeGiacomo said, getting state funding for the renovations will be crucial. However, the possibility of obtaining that funding will be jeopardized if they do not fulfill one of the above criteria.

"I anticipate that there will be a substantial price tag no matter what you do, but we can only get money from the state for enrollment or program improvements," DeGiacomo said.

The architects will report their findings to the school committee at its Sept. 14 meeting.

"My guess is that they are going to tell us that there's no reimbursement chance without an addition to one or both of the schools," DeGiacomo said. "It seems doubtful that we can fulfill the state's criteria for funding otherwise."

Modular classrooms are an option that could be considered in order to meet the demand caused by increased enrollment, but the state would not help to fund such a proposal.

"The state would undoubtedly have tough questions regarding the program goals," said Donald Walter, one of the architects working on the project. "If the solution is modular classrooms, it would not be reimbursable."

The school committee will decide for which options it would like the architects to draw up detailed plans. Those will likely be the same options that are presented to the Special Town Meeting on Dec. 6.

"My guess is that we'll end up showing the town two or three options," DeGiacomo said.

The five school renovation options

•Use the existing grade configurations and do the necessary physical plant renovations, without constructing additions. This option worries architects and school committee members because the state may not reimburse the renovations at 60 percent.

•Use the existing grade configurations while adding additions that would satisfy goals for program improvements and added enrollment. This option would not satisfy the goal of school administrators to create a middle school of grades 6-8, but would be reimbursable by the state.

•Move the sixth grade from Deer Hill to the middle school to create the 6-8 middle school that school administrators prefer. A new gymnasium, locker room, and cafeteria would have to be added to make the middle school a more separate entity. The third grade would be moved from Osgood to Deer Hill, which would create room at Osgood for full-day kindergarten •Move the sixth grade from Deer Hill to the middle school, but leave the third grade at Osgood. This would leave only the fourth and fifth grades at Deer Hill and would preclude the need for an addition at that school.

•Build an entirely new 6-8 middle school on an unspecified piece of land. The third grade would once again be moved from Osgood to Deer Hill. Due to the cost of buying the land, this proposal would be extremely costly and is considered very unlikely.

Scholarship honors former policeman

Fundraising dinner to be held Sept. 11

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

To honor a former Cohasset policeman who spent countless hours working with the town's youth, his family has instituted a scholarship in his name that will benefit Cohasset High School students. The Robert A. Goyette memorial scholarship will be presented annually to a male and female who have made community service a priority during their high school years. Goyette passed away in March 1998 after being stricken with cancer, but his son Bob is heartened that his legacy will be continued in such a meaningful fashion.

"Our family thought about how much my dad loved kids and how much he loved working with them," he said. "I know he would have wanted this."

A spaghetti dinner will help raise funds for a memorial scholarship in honor of the late Robert A. Goyette, shown here.

To raise money for the scholarship, a spaghetti dinner will be held on Sept. 11 from 7-12 p.m. at the Sons of Italy Hall, located on route 3A in Hingham. Admission is $10 and a raffle will be part of the event as well, with all proceeds going to the scholarship fund.

Bob explained how his dad's love affair with the town's youth came about.

"My dad was a police officer in Cohasset throughout the 1960s and he always made the kids in town a priority," he said. "He was one of the cops that the kids in town really looked up to. In this day and age, kids look at police as the bad guys, and that's really unfortunate."

At the age of 33, Goyette left Cohasset to become chief of police in Ayer, making him one of the youngest police chiefs in the history of Massachusetts. He moved back to Cohasset when he was appointed the director of a special drug unit and later served as police chief in Southboro, Ma. and Yarmouth, Me.

Bob said that his dad left an indelible impression on those who were kids in Cohasset during his tenure at the police department.

"He founded the Police Athletic League [PAL] and it was really huge back then," he said. "I remember that he'd always be at a basketball game or a floor hockey game. He'd work with all of the kids, from the younger ones to the high school kids. My brothers and sisters would always try to tag along."

To raise money for the PAL, Goyette organized football games between members of the New England Patriots and the town's police officers.

"I remember it would be a big fundraiser every year," Bob said. "All of the kids that my dad worked with in the town would come out and cheer him on. It was always a great event."

In addition to his work with youth sports, Goyette often went to Cohasset schools to educate kids about the dangers of drugs. Because of his commitment to enriching the quality of life for the kids in town, one of the foremost considerations in the awarding of the scholarship is that the recipients be involved in community service.

This year's recipients were Jami Butman and Anthony Bramblett, who were both chosen in large part for their involvement in building a teen center in town.

"We looked at community involvement through my father's eyes and tried to decide who he would have picked," Bob said. "The students write essays and we also look at their academic performance and athletics to a lesser extent, because my dad loved sports."

The scholarship will not be Goyette's only legacy at Cohasset high school, as all five of his children were Cohasset High grads. Bob said that he and his siblings are often reminded of how much their father gave to the town.

"People always come up to me and say great things about my dad, and it's the same with by brothers and sisters," he said. "The students that he worked with throughout the years always stayed in touch and I know my dad really loved that."

The Goyette family are hoping for a great attendance at the spaghetti dinner, and donations to the scholarship fund are also welcome for anyone who cannot attend. Donations may be sent to "Remember the Chief," 275 Cedar St, in Cohasset.

AROUND TOWN

A STAR IS BORN!

A Star Is Born — Tracy Jean Longo and Vince Longo now have a "star" of their very own! As you all know, Vince is the producer at the South Shore Music Circus, the "executive extraordinaire." Well, his wife, Tracy Jean Longo, was the "producer" last week and here she is — Marina Patton Longo. She is sweet, she is beautiful and we cannot wait to see Marina as she strolls "around town!" Welcome to Cohasset, Marina!

ROOKIE GOLFERS

Congratulations to four Cohasset rookie golfers for competing in the recent Hatherly Women's Member-Guest tournament: Jane Goff, Barbara Leahy, Ann Mitchell and Carol Riley. Look for the foursome to move up in the rankings next season!

BLOOD DRIVE

Circle the date on your calendar now for the next Cohasset Red Cross Blood Drive: Wednesday, Sept. 22, from 2 to 7 p.m. Watch the Mariner for more details.

HELP GETTING ORGANIZED

Fall is upon us, folks — if your closets and cupboards are in chaos or if your desktop is a disaster, you'll want to go to the Social Service League's program called, "Get Organized, Control Clutter and Stop Procrastinating!" on Tuesday, Sept. 14, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Residence.

COLLEGE GRADUATE

Joanne Hill of Cohasset was among 279 candidates who received degrees during the 69th Regis College commencement ceremonies Saturday, May 15. Joanne received a master of science degree in nursing. Congratulations to you, Joanne!

GREAT-GRANDMOTHER

Oh boy, is Enna Reid a happy lady, she is a great-grandmother! Jay and Susan (Reid) Burnett of Rehoboth, Mass., announce the birth of their son Braden Davis Burnett, born May 4, weighing 8 lbs. 1 oz. Grandparents are William and Nancy Reid of Scituate, and Donald and Janet Burnett of Harrisville, Pa.

Congratulations to all of you!

Here is Tracy Jean Longo with baby Marina.

REMEMBER THE CHIEF

There is a new memorial scholarship in full swing — everyone's favorite members Robert A. Goyette, former police chief and wonderful man! On Sept. 11 at the Sons of Italy there will be a special meal of spaghetti and meatballs (Bob's favorite meal). Not only do you get a wonderful meal, there will be entertainment and a raffle and tons of fun! The donation is $10 per person, and with that donation you will be assured that a CHS grad will receive a scholarship in the chief's name — what an honor that will be!

If the date is already taken for you, but you would still like to donate to this scholarship, send your donation to "Remember The Chief," 275 Cedar St., Cohasset; you will be glad you did (as will the scholar who receives this prestigious award)!

REPUBLICAN COOKOUT

The Cohasset Republican Town Committee recently held its annual cookout with special guests Lieutenant Governor Jane M. Swift and newly elected State GOP Chairman Representative Brian Cresta at the seaside home of Ted and Julie Guild. Although the date has passed, you may be interested in donating to the Republican Town Committee: they direct contributions to state, congressional and national candidates, direct mail state cards to voters at election time, pay for local newspaper ads to support Republican candidates, maintain computerized voter files to support candidates' efforts and send periodic mailings. Make your check payable to Cohasset GOP and send to George Watts, Treasurer, 76 Nichols Road, Cohasset.

COMMUNITY CENTER CLASSES

The South Shore Community Center is in full swing for the fall; they have many classes to offer! Everything to know about computers, exercise, CPR, family relationships, investing, faux finishes, design, calligraphy, cooking, designing a room — anything you want!

To register, or for more information, call 383-0088. Wonderful schedule, indeed, we are lucky to have the Center in our town!

BELATED BIRTHDAY WISHES

Belated birthday greetings to Norman Swain, hope your day was a happy one!

SHARE YOUR 'GOINGS ON'

That's the news from here — I would really love it if you would share your "goings-on" with me, then I can share it with everyone else! Try to remember to give me a call, or drop me a note, and I'll take care of the rest! You know, we do love your news!

Berents-Drolet

Kimberly Drolet, daughter of Will Drolet of Auburn, N.H., and Gloria Levesque of Beverly, married Nick Berents son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles N. Berent Jr. of Boston, formerly of Cohasset on Sept. 18 at the York Harbor, Maine.

The bride was given by her parents. The maid of honor was Jessica Drolet of Charlottesville, Va. The bridesmaids were Dawn Halkuff or New York City and Adrienne Hirshberg of Manchester, N.H.

David Arthur of Newburyport, Mass., served as best man. Ushers were John O'Neil of Somerville and Lt. Commander Stephen Bowen of Yorktown, Va.

The bride graduated from Pennsylvania State University with an MBA. She is employed at Johnson and Johnson in Skillman, N.J.

Her husband is a graduate of Pennsylvania State University with an MBA. He is employed at Standard and Poor's in New York City.

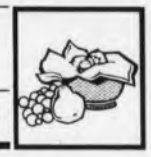
A reception was held at York Harbor Inn, York, Maine.

After a wedding trip to Greek Islands, the couple will reside in Norwalk, Conn.

Chicken fingers kids will love

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON



It is the season to honor our children — they are going back to school, apprehensive, excited — the whole gamut!

It's our turn to make their meals a special event, something to look forward to at the end of the day — how about some chicken fingers, what child doesn't love them! You can make them up in a flash, and they are good! With the chicken fingers serve oven potato wedges and the kids will think they are special, indeed!

CHICKEN FINGERS

6 boneless skinless chicken breast halves
1 egg, beaten
1 cup buttermilk
1-1/2 teaspoons garlic powder
1 cup all-purpose flour
1 cup seasoned bread crumbs
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking powder
oil for frying

Cut the chicken into 1/2-in. strips; place in a large resealable bag. Combine egg, buttermilk and garlic powder; pour over chicken. Seal and refrigerate for 2-4 hours. In another resealable large plastic bag combine flour, bread crumbs, salt and baking powder. Drain chicken, discarding buttermilk mixture, place chicken in the bag with the flour mixture; seal and shake to coat. In an electric skillet heat oil to 375 degrees. Fry the chicken in batches for 4-5 minutes or until golden brown. Drain on paper towels. Yield: 6 servings

OVEN POTATO WEDGES

2 pounds red potatoes, cut into small wedges
1 large onion, chopped
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon garlic powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon dried oregano

In a large bowl, combine all ingredients; stir to coat. Place in a single layer in an ungreased shallow baking pan. Bake uncovered, at 425 degrees for 30-35 minutes or until the potatoes are tender and lightly browned. Yield: 6 servings.

Activities for all ages at Wellness Fair

It's set to be a day of activities for all ages when the South Shore Community Center and Cohasset Elder Affairs throw open the doors of the Community Center Sept. 11 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. for a Recreation and Wellness Fair.

Designed as an opportunity for South Shore residents of all ages to learn more about the programs and services of the two sponsoring organizations in a fun-filled, relaxed atmosphere, the fair promises a little of something for everyone.

Child and family activities will include water and bubble play on the center's nursery school playground from 10-10:30 a.m., face painting and pony rides from 10 a.m. to noon; kite making all day and a magic show from 11 a.m. to noon, as well as open bowling, gymnastics demonstrations, chess demonstrations and an antique fire truck, which children will be encouraged to explore.

Adult-oriented activities will include coffee and treats inside the center, "hot topic" roundtable discussions on such subjects as the Internet, personal finance, natural healing, fitness and nutrition and gourmet cooking demonstrations by the center's cooking class instructors. Yoga, firming and toning, and line dancing demonstrations, as well as eye sight, blood pressure and foot care screening and clinics will be a part of the day's offerings.

For more information about fair participation, call the South Shore Community Center at (781) 383-0088.

The news and you

This time of year, we're all just coming back down to earth from the summer. Except for the drought, this summer has been a spectacular one weather-wise. Yes, we did have a heat wave or two, but now that we can feel fall in the air and know winter is not too far off — those 90-plus days don't seem so oppressive.

So as our energies refocus, it's a good time to remind you how to get your news in the Cohasset Mariner. To avoid typesetting logjams we need your "happenings" a week in advance of the issue in which you'd like them to appear. In other words, with the exception of obituaries, letters to the editor and sports news — our deadline is 8 a.m., Friday — the week before the next issue. So if you want something in next week, you should have it to us by 8 a.m., tomorrow. If you forget, please call us. We do make exceptions.

Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street or at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. You can send items by fax to 741-2931.

We need photo requests as soon as possible. We're proud of our talented photographers but we do share them with our sister newspapers in the Mariner group. That means they get booked up fast!

Putting a community paper out every week is a team effort — with you, our readers, as key players. Let us hear from you! Call us with questions and concerns at 741-2933.

Community guide

Okay, here's your chance. In just a few short weeks, the Cohasset Mariner along with all of its sister newspapers in the Mariner group, will publish their annual "Community Guide."

In addition to all the names and titles of town officials and how to reach them, there will be a list of community groups, clubs and non-profit organizations for each town.

This is where you can help. Chances are your group, club or organization has a different slate of officers than a year ago. Perhaps the contact person for prospective members has changed or there is a new telephone number. We need to have that information so our community guide is up-to-date and as accurate as possible. So please take a minute and send us a line or two telling us about your organization, along with a contact number where people can reach you. Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street, or mailed to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043 or sent by fax to 741-2931.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week. BHRC has compiled the 1999 roll call attendance records of the state's 40 senators for the first eight months of the 1999 session. Local senators' records are included in this week's report and cover January through August 27.

The Senate has held 60 roll calls. BHRC records the number of roll calls on which each local senator was present and voted and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total number of roll calls held. The percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record.

Twenty four of the state's forty senators have a 100 percent roll call attendance record. The Senator with the worst record is Tom Norton (D-Fall River) who missed 19 votes resulting in an attendance record of 68.3 percent. The other four senators with the worst records are Bob Travaglini (D-Boston) 80 percent; Bob Antonioni (D-Leominster) 83.3 percent; Charles Shannon (D-Winchester) 90 percent; and Dianne Wilkerson (D-Boston) 90 percent.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'Back door' expenditure

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing with reference to the news article in the Aug. 12 Mariner in which the selectmen discussed the possibility of requesting from the Advisory Committee a transfer from the Reserve Fund of $5,000 to pay for a needs assessment study for elderly housing in Cohasset.

I am disappointed that our selectmen would even consider using the Reserve Fund. G.L. c. 40, s. 6 plainly states that the purpose of the Reserve Fund is, "To provide for extraordinary or unforeseen expenditures." The issue of providing housing for our senior citizens has been around for some time. Although it is clear that the selectmen did not fully think through how to address this matter prior to the town meeting budget process, their lack of foresight and their desire at this time to fund a needs assessment study do not now make this an "unforeseen" expenditure. (And it certainly cannot be considered an "emergency" one under any construction of that word.)

If the selectmen do attempt to pursue this through a Reserve Fund transfer, their effort would constitute nothing less than a back-door move to subvert the usual town budget process. This would be analogous to the School Department, for example, deciding in mid-year, to add a new program (say, an athletic team) and asking the Advisory Committee to fund it out of the Reserve Fund.

Further, this would set a bad example for other town boards. In other towns in which I have lived, a board will make a Reserve Fund request — knowing full well that the request is not of an "emergency or unforeseen" nature — and thereby dump the issue on the Advisory Committee. The first board can make itself look like a hero to the particular constituency which is seeking the appropriation, and when the Advisory Committee invariably denies the request, the initiating board can play the "blame the Advisory Committee" game, when in fact it was the initial board which dropped the ball in the first place. By no means am I implying that the selectmen have this sort of ulterior motive here, but the fact that the selectmen appear willing to ignore the clear mandate of the Reserve Fund statute both sets a bad precedent and unfairly places the Advisory Committee in the position of bogeyman.

As regards the merits of spending $5,000 for a needs assessment study, I'm not sure where it is supposed to lead us. Diane Sullivan probably is correct that the need for some sort of condo housing for our seniors is clear (and that therefore a study is a waste of money because it only will confirm what we already know). But where do we go from there? Everyone agrees that more subsidized housing is not the way to go. But the only discussion I have heard involves using the town property behind the new library for a small number (10-20 units) of condos. (Parenthetically, I have to wonder how anyone can think this would be such a great place for our seniors. Housing in this area will be only yards away from the railroad tracks and near the Sohier Street grade crossing, which means that anyone who lives there will be blasted out of their beds starting at 5:45 every morning by the ear-shattering 110 decibel horns which will be blowing 26 times a day, every day.)

But clearly, the paltry number of units being discussed will not come anywhere near solving the problem if it is as great as Diane and others suggest. If indeed there are many seniors who want to sell their homes, but want to remain in Cohasset, then a larger scale plan is needed; something which nobody even remotely has discussed to this point as to how and where it might be accomplished.

It seems to me that the September meeting at which housing experts will appear could help our elected officials determine what options our town has depending on the need; i.e., if the need is small, we should do Plan A, if the need is large, we should do Plan B; or if the need is in-between, we should do Plan C. But if the town is incapable of accomplishing any of Plans A, B or C, then throwing away $5,000 for a needs assessment study on the theory that it is a necessary first step in the process, only will serve to give us lots of useless information and — unless we have some idea of what steps two, three and four might be — start us off on a road which inevitably will lead to nowhere.

Support for fire department

To the Editor:

I'd like to offer an unequivocal response to the question posed by firefighter Bill Protrulis, "does the town think it's money well spent to get four paramedics for the town's life-saving concerns?" (Firestorm of Controversy, Aug. 26). Yes! Yes! Yes! Of course, it is true that the taxpayers of Cohasset must make some difficult choices concerning spending and it's true that the taxpayers can't afford everything desirable, but ponying up the tax dollars for life-saving concerns is a no-brainer.

It's too easy to sit back in the safety of one's home and "nickel and dime" the fire department's budget; it's tempting also to wonder in judgment whether we need "them" or "that piece of equipment." But for the person in need who makes the call to 911 at that moment, there is no expenditure of tax dollars considered unnecessary, superfluous or wasteful. I suggest, we all put ourselves in the shoes of the person in need and answer the question posed by firefighter Protrulis. Or, to invoke pop culture, "Are we feeling lucky today?" I for one am unwilling to gamble with luck when it comes to protecting my home and family. For this tax issue, open my wallet and take what you need.

P.S. I have made use of 911 on more than one occasion and would like to publicly thank the firefighters and police officers for their swift and professional responses.

Commuter boat not elitist

To the Editor:

Your tongue-in-cheek article last week concerning the commuter boat was excruciatingly funny.

I almost fell off my chair laughing when you mockingly quoted MBTA Chairman Kevin Sullivan: "The water transportation has been a little-known success story." Little known, perhaps, to someone who only uses public transportation for photo opportunities.

But the killer line was "Because of the expense (the MBTA sets the boat fare at $4 versus a $2.50 average train fare) some have charged that the commuter boats are elitist, and Sullivan responded to that charge." The truth, of course, is that no one claims the boat is elitist. In fact, the MBTA is simply screwing the South Shore with a $4 boat fare to discourage use and paint a better picture for the train.

The boat costs are very low, and the MBTA boat subsidy works out to barely $1 per passenger. By contrast, the MBTA is providing tens of millions in capital and operating subsidies to artificially reduce train fares to a small fraction of the actual train costs. Boat service could be free for far less than the enormous subsidy required to sell Greenbush tickets for only $2.50.

You are working in a grand tradition running from Jonathan Swift to Andy Rooney. Keep up the good work.

Promise of commuter rail brought residents to town

To the Editor:

I am writing to respond to Tom Maloney's letter regarding the Greenbush line. I am relatively new to the South Shore. My wife and I moved to the South Shore four years ago from Needham. We moved to Scituate for a number of reasons, one of them was the promise of the commuter rail.

Where we moved from is important. The issue, as I see it, is that there are some people on the South Shore who never seem to leave the South Shore. These people live on the South Shore, shop on the South Shore and get their coffee from Marylou's on the South Shore (where I do, too). This gives way to a very parochial view of things. For instance, the gentleman from Hingham wants someone to locate a train line through a town center filled with children and shoppers that has seven grade crossings in a one mile stretch of track, anywhere in the country. Well, all you have to do is travel past the South Shore Plaza up Route 128 to Needham, Massachusetts. Needham has a town center filled with children and shoppers and boasts a commuter rail line. I will admit, Needham does not have seven grade crossings, but it does have six grade crossings, all within a very short stretch of track. One of the grade crossings is over Route 135 right in the center of town. As those of us who have been there can attest, Route 135 is a very popular road out in the Metrowest area. The Needham train closely passes many buildings, including one of the most popular restaurants in town. I have never measured the distance from the front door of the restaurant to the tracks, but it cannot be more than 10 feet! As a matter of fact, we lived four houses down from the Oak Street crossing. The only inconvenience was that you might have to wait a minute or two for the train to pass by as you walked home from the station. Go to Needham and just ask anybody how he or she feels about the train. They will tell you that the commuter rail has done nothing but enhanced the town's reputation and increased property values everywhere in town.

I agree with Mr. Maloney that we should know how much wetlands would be filled in for the train. However, we must remember that 1) train tracks are only 8 feet wide and 2) wetlands also go by another name: swamps.

As for the state turning away free money from the Feds, two things. First, Scituate and other South Shore towns already pay huge sums of money every year to the MBTA for absolutely no service. That is free money right here at home. Second, the Commonwealth is awash with money, a situation that comes only once in a lifetime.

We need to get the train running into Greenbush so that more of us here from the South Shore can see more of what is out there. Then instead of fighting the gridlock that Mr. Maloney writes so eloquently about, all we will have to do is take the Greenbush line to South Station and catch the Needham Junction line.

Dream house turns into nightmare

sion.

The decisions have led to litigation between the Naders and the town and have, at least temporarily, thwarted the family's bid to build their dream house on the property.

Conservation Commission member Veneta Roebuck said the Naders were advised to go to the state Department of Environmental Protection [DEP] in July regarding a permit for the property. That permit, a five-month extension of an existing permit, expired on Oct.1, only a month after the Naders began construction. The extension was granted in June to former applicants Thomas and Karen Coyne with the stipulation that work was to be completed by October.

Anthony Nader said that he did not realize the expiration of the permit would mean he had to stop construction on his house.

"I went on professional advice," he said. "I thought that once you start building something, that you'd be allowed to finish. I never dreamed they would go to such lengths to stop me from building my house."

When the permit expired, neighbors called DEP, which issued a stop-work order. The Naders then filed a Notice of Intent [NOI] with the commission this February, attempting to gain the commission's approval for the project, which it had previously approved in 1988.

Hearings on the NOI began that month and continued through May, when the commission issued its denial of a permit for the project. Due to the amount of money he had spent on hearings and legal fees, Nader was infuriated by the denial.

"I think that they knew from day one that they were going to turn us down," he said. "Every time there's a hearing, it's money out of my pocket, money that should be used for this family. We went to four different hearings and spent $6,000 on hay bales and overflow swale, and they turned us down. It doesn't cost the members of the commission a dime. They're shielded from liability and when I win in the end, it's the taxpayers of this town that are going to pay. I wonder if the people of this town realize what this commission is doing."

The conservation commission denied the project based on its interpretation of the Cohasset Wetlands Protection Bylaw, a 1990 statute which had not yet been enacted when the commission initially approved the project in 1988.

A vernal pool, which is dry much of the year, lies 24 feet in front of the proposed residence. The vernal pool is often referred to as an ice pond, as it is frozen for much of the winter. The wetlands bylaw states that "a 50-foot buffer zone away from wetlands may be required where none previously exists, due to previous destructive activities."

"The conservation commission wouldn't put people they know and love through this," Nader said. "We've invested over $350,000 of our own money in this so far, and $100,000 of that has been on unnecessary legal fees. We should be using this money for the future education of our children. How would your wife and your kids feel if they were put through what we've been put through?"

"We had all of the permits we needed when we bought the property," Helaine Nader said. "I just can't believe that people would treat us like this. All we wanted to do was move our family into a nice town. The whole past year has been incredibly stressful. It's been the longest year of my life."

Roebuck said she does feel for the Naders, but added that she and the rest of the commission must uphold the town's environmental bylaws.

"Of course we care about them, how could you not," she said of the Naders. "They have three young children. We might want to say to hell with the vernal pool but we have to be consistent in interpreting the law."

Nader said that the bylaw does not explicitly state that one cannot build within that 50-foot buffer zone.

"The bylaw says that it is preferred that people don't build in the 50-foot zone, but it doesn't say that you cannot," he said. "They think they're protecting the environment, but they don't care about people. They're supposed to find ways for people to coexist with the environment."

Roebuck said once the DEP permit expired, the commission had to look at the merits of the project alone, and could not simply allow work to be completed because it was already underway.

"I'm sorry that Mr. Nader made some bad decisions, but we can't just turn our heads," she said. "Because the DEP permit expired on Oct. 1, we were only supposed to look at the property as it stood on that date. I don't know how he thought he was going to build a house in 30 days, but we try very hard to keep to the wetlands bylaw. Nothing just gets 'grandfathered' in."

Nader said the commission has been completely unwilling to work with him and his wife to find a reasonable compromise.

"They want us to move the house to another part of the property, but if we did that we'd have to get a setback variance anyway," he said. "The foundation is already in, and we've already put in a culvert, a crossing, and did clearing as well. None of their excuses make any sense."

The Naders are also in the appeals process regarding the building permit for the property, which was suspended by building commissioner Bob Egan on July 8.

Since 1997, Egan has issued three building permits for construction of a single-family dwelling on the property. He said the suspension was due to a closer look at where the floodplain should be delineated on the property regarding Cohasset bylaws.

"When this thing started getting contentious, I went back and looked at our zoning laws concerning it," he said. "We had been going by the FEMA [Federal Emergency Management Agency] map when the permit was granted the previous three times. But going by the town map, that portion is in the flood zone. It was something that I just stumbled upon. I didn't really go looking for it."

Nader said he holds no animosity toward Egan, but disagrees with his interpretation of the property's floodplain delineation. He is appealing the suspension of the building permit to the zoning board of appeals, with a hearing slated for Sept. 7.

"The appeal is based on the flood plain line," he said. "By going by the FIRM map, which insurance companies use to delineate flood zones, the house is outside of the flood zone."

Should the appeal be granted, the Naders would still have to gain a wetlands permit, which will mean more litigation and more court costs.

"This is costing us a tremendous amount of money, but I have to protect what I've already spent," Nader said. "There's a likelihood that I'll lose everything and they have nothing to worry about. We're not a factory. What impact could we have on the vernal pool?"

Conservation commission chairman Michael Dick said the commission is trying to maintain the same standards it always has regarding the wetlands bylaw.

"Our record speaks for itself," he said. "We have consistently kept new construction out of the 50-foot buffer zone. I have not seen any signs of favoritism in my time on the commission."

Nader said that the commission has misused its power to deny his family their rights regarding their property.

"They have so much authority and you either have the ability to fight them or you don't," he said. "People can be tied up in court for years. The American dream isn't built on that, and they're destroying that dream for me and my family. This is a beautiful town and I'm sure 99.9 percent of the people in town are wonderful people. That's why we wanted to move here in the first place."

"All of this over a nice family wanting to move into a nice town," Helaine Nader said. "I can't believe all this has happened over issues that really aren't all that important."

ART NOTES

"Lemonade" by William Bartlett will be part of an exhibition at the Christopher Gallery.

William Bartlett — 'Transcending Realism'

The Christopher Gallery is proud to present "Transcending Realism" by William Bartlett. The public is invited to attend an opening reception Saturday, Sept. 11, from 7 to 10 p.m. The exhibition will hang through Oct. 16. All of the paintings included in the show are available for purchase.

William Bartlett's work reflects a sense of visual order and craftsmanship. Working mainly in oil, he paints portraits, landscapes, still life and complex studio pieces. Bartlett's painting style, reminiscent of the famed Boston School, is rooted in realism, but with a twist. Each image evokes meaning and represents an unspoken statement by the artist. His unique designs and choice of subject matter bring a new vision to traditional painting. Discover the truly original work of William Bartlett.

Christopher Gallery hours are Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; and Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. You can also visit the gallery on the web at www.christophergallery.com

Staircase Gallery welcomes watercolorist

Watercolor artist Nancy Sargent Howell's paintings are featured at South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery through the end of October.

Howell, a relative of John Singer Sargent, teaches painting and resides in Dedham. She also leads painting workshops to Europe and to numerous places around the United States.

As a teacher, Howell stresses the understanding of how color works, and how to develop a personal sense of each painting. She encourages her students to find their own experience in each work of art they produce.

"Although I am influenced by the paintings of my relative John Singer Sargent, I use a limited palette and try to do as much color mixing on the paper as I am able," explains the South Shore Art Center artist.

"I usually start with a soft wash of color and then build up layers of paint, creating new patterns with each layer, all the while trying to keep my colors vibrant. Connecting patterns of color, value and shape into a harmonious setting, and in a very personal way, is my goal."

Howell's paintings have been exhibited at the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, The Attleboro Museum, The Cahoon Museum in Cotuit, Mass., The Currier Museum in Manchester, N.H., and The New England Center in Durham, N.H.

Her associations have included memberships with New England Watercolor Society, Copley Society, New Hampshire Art Association, South Shore Art Center, North River Arts Society and Concord Art Association.

The Staircase Gallery is opened Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday, 9 a.m. to noon. Admission is free. South Shore Conservatory is located at One Conservatory Drive in Hingham. For more information, call 781-749-7565, ext. 16.

PILGRIM COOPERATIVE BANK 1916

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR CUSTOMERS OF THE PILGRIM CO-OPERATIVE BANK

The Federal Reserve has asked banks to make absolutely sure customers understand two things about the coming "Y2K" date changeover:

Banks nationwide have been preparing for "Y2K" for a long time — 2 to 3 years in some cases. Here at Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, every piece of computer equipment is brand-new and has been tested to detect potential date-change problems. We've passed these tests with flying colors — as have financial institutions nationwide. That's not to say there won't be any glitches anywhere. But, thanks to our advance preparations and back-up plans, the Bank is in very good shape to avoid "Y2K" problems.

The safest place for your money? In the bank! AARP is recommending you keep "a long weekend's worth" of cash on-hand for New Year's 2000. That sounds about right. And since your FDIC/SIF deposit insurance coverage is not in any way affected by "Y2K," the safest place for the rest of your money is in your insured accounts here in the Bank. Scam artists and crooks see "Y2K" as a major opportunity. Don't give them a chance to take advantage of you!

If you have any questions or any concerns about "Y2K" and your money, please call 781-383-0541 or come see us. We'll talk it over and help you get the answers and information you need to set your mind at ease. Our goal: To help you see New Year's 2000 as a true cause for celebration, not worry!

Nationals return a success

By Barry McGurn
CORRESPONDENT

Despite age differences and slight differences in competition, the return of the 210 National Championships to Cohasset last week seemed to be a success.

"It was a lot of fun," said 17-year old Cohasset resident Wiley Wakeman of his first time sailing in the 210 Nationals. "(Our crew wasn't) going out there to win. We were just going out to have fun and we did. We accomplished what we wanted to."

Wakeman, whose father Sam won the 210 Nationals in 1972 and was a longtime competitor, knew he and his two cousins, Taylor, 16, and Whitney, 13, would have tougher and more experienced competition last week, so he was pleased overall with his first 210 National.

"Cohasset is a very well-positioned town to hold major regattas and certainly has over the years."
SECOND PLACE FINISHER, STUART HEBB

"Of course we can always hope for more wind and longer time (with the wind) - it kind of came late," said Wakeman, who will enter his senior year this fall at the Groton School, of the less-than-perfect conditions. "The last day (Thursday) was pretty bad with fog and rain and a lack of wind. But every regatta has its downfalls. I haven't been to many that have been perfect."

Cohasset's Stuart Hebb, who finished second in the final standings (behind Milwaukee's Jeff Putney), concurred.

"It was pretty light air and that's not our strength," said Hebb, who notched his second consecutive second-place finish. "I was happy getting second. We came in second last year (in Marblehead). The heavy air races is what got us up there. If we get wind and waves we have much more of an advantage than we do in the lighter stuff."

Hebb pointed out that last year's winner finished 13th last week.

"That will let people know how volatile the light air can be. Given that, I'm happy taking second under those circumstances."

Halfway through the week, Hebb trailed Falmouth's Oakley Jones (third place), but eventually overtook Jones, then held on for second.

Hebb said the winner Putney put together three solid races near the end of the regatta to wrap it up.

Following Putney, Hebb and Jones were Hingham's Kye Partridge (fourth), Gull Lake, Michigan's Jim Babel (fifth), Hingham's Susan Ep-

Powell's the one to watch on the ice

By Eric Shulman
CORRESPONDENT

There is a rising star in our own backyard. There is no need to look up in the sky, but only in a nearby ice hockey rink. There you may find Brad Powell, a senior at Cohasset High School and recently named among the top 25 scholastic hockey prospects in New England.

Powell currently plays for the Rockland-based Bay State Breakers, a junior team and new member of the prestigious Eastern Junior Hockey League.

Powell is a 5'11" 160-pounder who is a very dynamic skater with great passing and shooting skills.

He plays the center position on the first line for the Breakers, but also sees plenty of ice time on the power play and penalty killing unit. Powell is versatile enough to play some defense, as well, especially on the power play where he can utilize his hard slapshot.

Since he was very young, Powell has been on the ice. He is from West Hartford, Conn., where he played through seventh grade. He was a member of Team Connecticut and his state's Select Team, where for both teams, he played against elite competition throughout New England, the United States and Canada.

As an eighth grader, Powell moved to Cohasset and joined a summer hockey league at Hockey Unlimited run by his current Bay State Breakers' coach David McCauley. The coach had successful leagues and formed a junior team, the Breakers, with his top players.

Powell played for Cohasset High School as a freshman, making the varsity club. The school opted to play a jayvee schedule during Powell's sophomore year.

That same year the Breakers were born and Powell played in some games for the newly formed junior team. Last year, as a junior at Cohasset High School, Powell completed the jump up, playing a full season for the Breakers and coach McCauley.

"Brad is a great kid and combines his hockey talent with excellent grades in the classroom," coach McCauley said. "He is a great asset to the team with his speed and instincts on the ice. He is a huge presence in the locker room and always gives 110-percent at practices, during games and also represents himself and the team well off the ice."

The Breakers played over 60 games as an independent, traveling a lot throughout North America, with its home ice being the Rockland Rink.

Belson hopes for an injury-free junior year

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Matt Belson approaches the Bay State Games' lacrosse competition as a chance to have some summer fun before heading off to the rigors of a Division I college program.

Being a major part of gold medal teams is also fun for the former Cohasset High standout and member of the Lafayette College varsity squad.

"It's a good time and it keeps you in shape," said the personable Belson of his experience with the BSG's. "Like any other sport, the competition goes up and down."

The competition may have varied in his five years of competing in the BSG's, but Belson's success hasn't waned. The midfielder has earned three gold medals and a pair of silvers while helping the Southeast team to consecutive undefeated tourneys over the past two summers. The Southeast team is currently holding down a 10-0 record over that two-year span.

Belson believes the lacrosse competition has been a little softer because the BSG's schedule conflicts with that of a large college tourney in Glastonbury, Ct. The highly-competitive tournament draws from some of the best collegiate lacrosse talent in the country. Belson has twice been invited to play, but has opted instead for the more local BSG.

"It's a hike to Connecticut and my mother is able to see me play in the Bay State Games," Belson said.

As one of the key ingredients to Cohasset High's strong lacrosse program, Belson established himself as a solid defensive player and a strong passer, able to start Skipper breaks in an instant. He found college play at the Division I level to be more intense, but made the transition smoothly and was an instant impact for Lafayette.

"It was definitely a good leap," Belson said of the jump from schoolboy to collegiate lacrosse. "In high school, you could rely on just your stick skills. You could get by if you were mediocre."

Belson was never a "mediocre" high school player and found college lacrosse very much to his liking. He started strongly his freshman year and wound up earning a berth on the Patriot All-League team.

It was during Belson's sophomore season that he sustained an injury serious enough that he was out of action for the first time in his career. He suffered a hamstring pull early in the campaign and missed three games. The injury was hardly career threatening, but it nagged Belson the remainder of the season, keeping his playing level on the field well below 100 percent.

"That's the only injury that has ever kept me out," said Belson. "I just tried

Cohasset Sailing Club results

JUNIOR RACING RESULTS AND ANNUAL AWARD DAY

On Sunday, Aug. 29, the Cohasset Sailing Club ended its 40th summer of teaching sailing and sportsmanship on Cohasset Harbor with the annual Awards Day cookout. More than 200 children and teenagers from 10 to 15 years old participated in this year's sailing and water safety program, in addition to 24 adults who spent Saturday and Sunday mornings learning to sail in the club's fleet of Cape Cod Mercury sailboats.

On Awards Day, club members and their families enjoyed a warm sun and brisk winds as the junior sailors showed off their racing skills, piloting Turnabouts around an inside-the-harbor race course. After the traditional hot dog lunch, awards were presented to the outstanding sailors in each class from the 10-year-old Mates to the 14-year-old Sailing Masters. Perpetual trophy awards were then presented to sailors whose success and service to the club are recognized each year.

MATCH RACING

In the one-day Match Racing event, the club's top racers duel each other in an elimination race that tests all of their racing skills.

First place: Betsy Reynolds; second place: Owen McDonald; third place: Julie Shea.

WASSER CUP

In the summer long Wasser Cup racing series, the final results rewarded the consistent performance of the winning crew through a long and competitive summer season.

First place: Owen McDonald, Justin Runey and John DeWaal; second place: Betsy Reynolds and Rachel McElroy.

PERPETUAL TROPHIES

The Herb Towle Award is awarded each year to the junior sailor who makes the greatest overall contribution to club activities and best represents the club's values of sailing, seamanship and sportsmanship. This year the award went to Julie Shea.

The Peter Greenman Award recognizes the adult club member who makes a significant contribution of time and energy to the make the club a community resource for recreation and sports education. This year's award was presented to Commodore Chuck Peterson for his tireless efforts on behalf of the junior sailors of Cohasset. In further recognition of his many contributions, the Cohasset Flying Scott Fleet established the Peterson Cup that will be a perpetual fleet trophy for sailing excellence.

The Cohasset Sailing Club wants to thank all of those who participated in club activities this summer, and members look forward to meeting the new crew of 10-year-olds in the summer of 2000. As a nonprofit community resource, the Sailing Club has provided a summer recreation program for the children of Cohasset since 1960. In order to continue its commitment to safe and competitive sailing, the club will initiate its first fund-raising effort in 20 years this fall to pay for boat repairs and replacements. If your children have enjoyed the benefits of Sailing Club training in the past, or if you have children who will enjoy the fun of a Sailing Club summer in the future, members ask that you consider a generous tax deductible donation when you are contacted by a volunteer, so that they can continue serving the youth of Cohasset.

to work through it and didn't practice that much."

Belson figures he was playing at about "60 to 70 percent" of his best as a sophomore and was frustrated at not being able to practice with the team, the coaches instead deciding to save him for the games.

However, Belson made the most of his playing time and wound up ranked No. 7 in the country in coming up with groundballs. Gaining possession of a groundball in lacrosse may not strike a familiar cord with peripheral fans of the sport, but coaches and players regard it as a huge part of the game.

Belson compares gathering a groundball in lacrosse with coming down with a rebound in basketball. Like the rebound, retrieving a groundball gives the team an offensive advantage. And there are certain situations where a goal is very likely as a result.

"Sometimes you can get the groundball right off the face-off and that can lead to a fast break," Belson said.

Teams which chalk up more groundballs in a game, generally wind up with a "W" in the win column and it's one of the first statistics coaches examine following a game.

Belson began to anticipate where the ball was going to be passed and improved his positioning in order to pick up the groundballs. He recorded his season-high mark of 13 recovered grounders against Villanova.

Belson had shown signs that coming up with groundballs was one of his strong suits his freshman year when he wound up ranked No. 11 in Division I. His scoring output also improved as Belson went from one goal and two assists as a freshman to two goals and seven assists.

There's little wonder why Belson is looking forward to an injury-free junior lacrosse season. To contribute to a team, while playing with a bothersome injury all season is impressive enough. But to improve on your previous year's statistics and be ranked among the best in the country in any category is truly amazing.

Belson won't have to wait long until he's back on the field again. While the official lacrosse season isn't until the spring, as a member of the varsity team Belson plays in the fall and indoors during the winter months. All told, the amount of time Belson spends practicing and playing in games works out to 25-30 hours weekly.

"It keeps you in shape," said Belson, "but it's very time-consuming, especially when you have schoolwork to do on top of it."

Belson admits he has toyed with the idea of making a run at professional indoor lacrosse after college, but dismissed the idea almost as quickly as it came.

For starters, pro lacrosse players don't make anywhere close to the money pulled in by athletes in the four major sports in this country. But more importantly, Belson's real goal is to pursue a degree in law. Splitting pro lacrosse with the vast amount of work needed to earn the degree would be next to impossible.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

THAT GLAZED LOOK

One primary factor to take into consideration when selecting ceramic tile is its suitability for the task for which it is intended. In this respect, the strength of the glaze (tile's protective outer surface) is very important. Fortunately, consumers can refer to the International Standards Organization's Tile Standard for a 0-5 rating of tile's ability to withstand wear: 0 - for decorative uses (walls) only; 1 - for light duty residential floors; 2 - for general residential floors, including kitchens; 3 - for residential entryways and light commercial use; 4 - heavier traffic areas in commercial installations, including restaurants and office buildings; 5 - for heavy-traffic commercial areas. In general, tile intended for residential applications is divided into floor tile and wall tile.

Selecting the right color and pattern of flooring is an important part of the interior design process. Of equal importance is the durability of materials. THE DESIGNING WOMAN emphasizes individualized and comprehensive interior design services for residential and commercial clients. We can create a detailed design plan that considers your personal tastes, function of the space in question, and budget. Celebrate the fall season in newly remodeled rooms. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient appointment.

HINT: While wall tiles cannot withstand the stresses of foot traffic, floor tiles can be used on walls.

Nationals return a success

stein (sixth), South Boston's Butch Milan (seventh), Gloucester's Gordon Baird (eighth), Cohasset's Charles Henry (ninth) and Hingham's Wisner Murray (tenth).

Local John Keane, a former 210 National Champion, stayed involved in the nationals by allowing Henry to use his boat in Henry's first year in the nationals.

Wakeman (21st), Tom Hamilton (22nd) and Diarmuid O'Connell (23rd) were three other Cohasset residents involved.

"Last year when we came in second, we lost the regatta in the final race," said Hebb, who bought his boat in 1996. "That second was hard to take - this second was a lot easier to take. The best we ever got to the top mark was fifth place, so we spent every single race fighting back. I guess in golf terms, we never really got a good bounce of the ball.

"But it could have been worse for sure."

Next year's nationals will take place in Gull Lake, Michigan. Every third year, the 210 Nationals are hosted in the midwest, following two years in the east.

But many in the town seemed pleased to have it back in Cohasset for the first time since 1988.

"Cohasset is a very well-positioned town to hold major regattas and certainly has over the years," said Hebb, who praised the host Cohasset Yacht Club and the assisting race committee, including Davey Marks and Cliff Dickson. "It was just good to have a major event here. We're hoping we can sort of build on it and host more regattas and get more people involved."

Powell's the one to watch on the ice

top scorers, and attempts to model his game after Paul Kariya of the Anaheim Mighty Ducks, amassed over 20 goals and 50 points as the Breakers played a little over .500 hockey.

"It's a sacrifice on your social life and it is difficult playing against the top players in your age group all over the country and keeping up your grades," Powell said. "It's all worth it. I learned so much from my coach and teammates and have had great experiences and met many people. It also gives you a chance to get noticed by many college and pro scouts."

Last spring, Powell was selected to play in the Hockey Night In Boston All Scholastic Tournament and again he raised the eyebrows of the many in attendance.

"My goal is to get a scholarship and go to college next year where I can get the combination of an education and hockey that best fits me," Powell said. "My grades are good and my game continues to improve so hopefully things will come together for me this season."

The Breakers are now in their third year and have decided to forego independent status and join the EJHL. This highly regarded league is sure to help make Powell a more widely spoken name in hockey circles.

"I owe a lot to coach McCauley. He does anything he can to help his players get needed exposure and treats us very well," Powell said. "I also owe a lot to my father. He has never played hockey, but he is an astute observer of the game and his advice has helped my game a great deal."

If you are a hockey fan, Brad Powell is a name that you will be hearing more and more of this upcoming season. Keep your eyes and ears open and go to a nearby ice hockey rink to check out this new rising star.

Free web sites available

Does your team have a free web site yet? The fall sports season is almost here and the Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), is offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

For high school coaches, this is a great way to get out the news of your team without spending any money from your town's school budget. There's no need to wait for some outside company to handle all the coding because you, members of your team and/or their parents can easily update these sites.

For more information on this free program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

CNC will provide the web site and train organization representatives in web page design and building, using self-publishing internet software that is accessible from any computer. No software is needed. Most people only need one 2 1/2-hour training session to get the hang of it. And there's a handy online manual available as a reference. Unlike some other offers, this one has no hidden fees and there are no catches - this is absolutely free.

Each group and team will build and maintain its own site. Post game results, schedules, a calendar of events, bulletin boards, lists of officials and team rosters, photos and/or directions to fields. Also, create maps and forms.

This program is available to all youth, adult, recreational and high school sports teams and organizations. Even groups who already have web sites are invited to join in and be a part of this growing web network.

Divers fare well at championships

The Cohasset Diving Team wrapped up a successful season with a strong showing at the league championships at Wheaton College.

A long summer of hard work paid off as four divers placed in the top three of their respective groups. Kelsey Bell took first in the 12 & under girls competition, while Alex Hernan was second in the boys 12 & under. Mac Chase grabbed a second place finish in the 17 & under boys, and Gillian Weber rounded out the strong contingent from Cohasset with a third place finish in the 17 & under girls.

Other competitors on the team this year were rookies Eric MacCarthy, Gabriella Flibotte, Mark Flibotte, Chuck Kelly, Patrick Kelly, Wesley Medwid, Kate Carpenter, Alyssa Campbell, Sarah Johnson and Mike Grimm.

Veterans Jacqueline Chase, Reed Dickinson, Chelsea Grossman, Kelly Hurley, Mie Lieb-Lappen, Lisa Musco and Roxanne Tehranian also had fine seasons. All-star divers were Amanda Faulkner, Ashler Saber, Wesley Ulmer, Sarah Merkert, Lynne Sheridan and Katherine Whoriskey.

The team was coached by Sarah Meehan.

LIBRARY CORNER

The Children's Room

Registration for the six-week fall pre-school story hour at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library will begin Tuesday, Sept. 7. Story hours will be held Thursday afternoons at 1 p.m., beginning Sept. 23, and continuing through Sept. 30, Oct. 7, 14, 21 and 28. Another session will be held Friday mornings at 10 a.m. beginning Sept. 24, and continuing through Oct. 1, 8, 15, 22 and 29.

Each 45-minute program consists of several picture stories, songs and crafts. Children must be at least 3-1/2 to 5 years old to participate. Call Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, at 383-1348 for registration.

Magazines wanted

Janet Husband, Paul Pratt Memorial Library Director, is looking for any and all 1998 and 1999 National Geographic magazines. If you have a collection of National Geographic magazines beginning January of 1998 and continuing to August 1999, call Janet at 383-1348. Thank you for your support!

Investment service at library

"Value Line Investment Survey Expanded Edition" is available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This service reports on 1,800 additional stocks, beyond the 1,700 stocks covered in the basic Value Line Investment Survey, also available at the library. These two services publish each week, giving summaries, ratings and various "screens" on a group of stocks. These two services are paid for by the Mercie Vinal Nichols Fund, a library trust fund.

IT'S HAPPENING

Dramatic club season

The Cohasset Dramatic Club announces its 79th season.

Productions include: Fall 1999, "A Funny Thing Happened On the Way to the Forum"; Winter 2000, "Arsenic and Old Lace"; and Spring 2000, "The Music Man."

All shows will be at the historic Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.

For information on becoming a member, send your name, address and phone number to The Cohasset Dramatic Club, P.O. Box 552, Scituate 02066.

How to organize your life

Whether the problem is closet chaos, desktop disorder, juggling appointments, balancing a budget, missing receipts or missing deadlines, it is necessary to put order in our lives. Time management expert, Andrew Swartz, will tell us how to do it in a program, sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset entitled, "Get Organized, Control Clutter and Stop Procrastinating!" which will take place on Tuesday, Sept. 14 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Residence/Bancroft Hall. Admission is $6.

Swartz promises to teach participants how to plan and organize their schedules and how to analyze their own use of time to become more efficient. Examples of the advice we can expect to receive are: Discover what time of day is your "prime time," when you are most awake and full of energy. Use this time for any serious thinking and making important decisions. Eliminate one time-wasting factor from your life each week. Get tough about time. Learn to respect that time is limited. Remember that people are visual. Organize your home and office by, for example, using colored file folders.

For more information or for directions to the Lightkeepers' Residence, call the Social Service League at 383-0771.

An invitation to join Junior Voices

Do you like to sing? Do you enjoy performing on stage in costume? Do you like learning cool moves in a group to perform while you sing in front of an audience?

Then come sing with Junior Voices! They're starting soon and expect a talented chorus with lots of new faces! They hope yours will be among them! Junior Voices especially welcome middle school singers, since Junior Voices has expanded to include grades 4-8.

JVs will meet for a get-acquainted session Wednesday, Sept. 15, from 4:15 to 5:15 p.m. at Wilder Hall in South Hingham.

Please register with Lynn Anderson at 749-9759 no later than Monday, Sept. 13, if you'd like to attend the Sept.15 session.

Regular class sessions begin Sept. 22; they sing every Wednesday from 4:15 until 5:30 p.m. Classes directed by Margo Euler include music-reading instruction, and rehearsal of classical, folk and Broadway repertory in two and three parts. The group welcomes children who can match pitches accurately, hold their own part in a round, and who sincerely love to sing.

Annual benefit clambake

The Christine Burke Scholarship Fund clambake, sponsored by George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 is Saturday, Sept. 11, noon to sunset (rain date is Sept. 12) at Sandy Beach, Cohasset.

There will be live entertainment by the Irish Volunteers. A tax-deductible donation of $30 per person is required. Dinner will be served at 3 p.m.

Checks are payable to American Legion Post 118 and mailed to George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118, c/o Mr. Duncan McCormack, 88 Summer St., Cohasset 02050.

Please indicate whether the tickets should be mailed to you or if you will pick them up at the clambake.

Auditions for dramatic club production

The Cohasset Dramatic Club's holiday auditions for "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way to The Forum," the hysterical, historical comedy set 200 years before the Christian era in Rome, directed by Doug Trudeau.

The club needs eight men, ages open, with good movement and some singing; eight women, ages 18-30 with good movement, singing and dancing; one 40-plus, stern with minor singing; one 20s, dimwitted, good singing; plus a various ensemble of men and women of various ages, not all singing.

Auditions will be held at Cohasset Town Hall on the following dates: Sunday, Sept. 12, 6-9 p.m.; and Monday, Sept. 13, 7-9 p.m.

Call backs are Tuesday, Sept. 14, 7-9 p.m.

For more information, call Dawn at (781) 545-3195.

Siros to host animal shelter benefit

Siros Restaurant of Hingham is hosting a gala benefit for the Haughey Animal Shelter of Scituate on Sunday, Oct 17, from 2 until 5 p.m. The afternoon will include complimentary hors d'oeuvres, drinks and buffet. A silent auction and live music will add to the festivities. Tickets will be available at the animal shelter after Labor Day for a donation of $50 apiece.

The animal shelter, which serves the towns of Cohasset, Hull and Scituate, provides a secure and caring environment for cats and dogs waiting for adoption. The Friends of the Scituate Shelter raise funds for preventive health care such as basic tests, routine shots and other necessities. Funds are also used for a proactive spay/neuter program.

The October benefit is chaired by Dave Cerruti, an honorary member of the Friends of the Scituate Shelter Board and is coordinated with Kristie Henriksen, owner of Siros. The benefit is the first event planned by the recently elected board. Officers are chair, Jane Granstrom; vice-chair, Kim Gilsdorf; treasurer, Sharon Plourde; and secretary, Carole Coffey. Please call 781-545-8703 for more information.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Ben Smoot wins seven B.C. High awards

Benjamin T. Smoot of Cohasset, a 1999 graduate of Boston College High School, recently received the school's most prestigious award, "The James M. Dever Award." The award was presented to Smoot by Fr. Joseph Fahey, S.J., president of B.C. High, at Senior Class Night, an evening set aside to celebrate and reward its seniors. The Dever award is presented annually to that member of the graduating class who has excelled both in scholarship and in service to the school and the wider community.

In addition to receiving the coveted Dever Award, Smoot won six other awards. Dr. Bailey, principal of B.C. High, presented Smoot with a prize for maintaining a quality point average of 4.0+ and finishing among the top 10 in the graduating class.

The National Merit Scholarship Committee also awarded Smoot a rating of Finalist for his outstanding score in the National Merit Scholarship Exam.

The National Honor Society Committee also gave a special award to Smoot for his outstanding leadership, academic success, community service and involvement in extracurriculars at the school.

Smoot won awards for excellence in two subjects. This means that he was the top student in his class for English Literature Advanced Placement and for Economics Advanced Placement. In Economics, he also won a maxima cum laude award in the National test of Economic literacy, sponsored by the National Council for Economic Education.

Lastly, Smoot won a Richard Phelps/Boston Globe Scholar Athlete scholarship.

From L-R are, the Rev. Joseph Fahey, S.J., president of B.C.High; vice principal Margaret Florentine; Benjamin Smoot holding the Dever Award; principal Dr. Raymond Bailey.

OBITUARIES

Lucie M. Leonard

Lucie Marie (Baldassini) Leonard, 82, of Cohasset, a former employee of Sears-Roebuck, died Monday, Aug. 16, at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth following a short illness.

Mrs. Leonard worked for several years in the complaint department of Sears-Roebuck in East Weymouth. She had also worked at Kresge's in Quincy Square.

Born and educated in West Quincy, she lived in Cohasset since the 1930s.

In an era before teaching certificates were needed, Mrs. Leonard worked as a nursery school teacher in the Cohasset Community Center. She was hired because of her unique ability to read stories while playing the piano.

She was a 25-year volunteer at the Cohasset Consignment Shop and was a Brownie leader.

Mrs. Leonard graduated from Quincy High School at the age of 16 with a double promotion in an abbreviated senior year. She attended Higgins Business School in Boston.

She leaves her husband of 57 years, Robert A. Leonard Sr.; two sons, Robert A. Leonard Jr. and his wife Mary of Marco Island, Fla. and Roger E. Leonard and his wife Karen of N. Quincy; three brothers, Frank Baldassini of Weymouth, Joseph Baldassini of Braintree and Philip Baldassini of Wollaston; five sisters, Rita George of Rockland, Theresa Dracoules and Angela Messeso, both of Quincy, Genevieve Quigley of Needham and Rosalie Francis of Braintree; and several nieces and nephews. She was mother of the late Alice F. Leonard and sister of the late Yolanda Potts of Holbrook.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers contributions in Mrs. Leonard's memory may be made to the Social Service League of Cohasset, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset 02025 would be appreciated.

Historical review is next stop for Greenbush rail

By Carol Britton Meyer and Alice Coyle
STAFF WRITERS

Depending on who you talk to, the latest environmental and financial studies of the Greenbush rail line are greeted with either enthusiasm or skepticism.

The 33-page environmental study by the Army Corps of Engineers says no other transportation alternatives to Greenbush will meet the purposes of the project as defined by the MBTA — that of reducing the number of cars on the roadways. The financial study looking at the project's costs is expected to be released Friday and says the state can build the rail line for less than the limit of $400 million imposed by Gov. Cellucci.

The MBTA appears renewed and energized by the reports.

"It's a major step forward for us," said Andrew Brennan, the MBTA's manager of environmental affairs. Brennan said with alternatives to commuter rail on the table, the historic review process was being held up. "The alternatives and their historic impacts had to be ruled out. In the past, opponents to the project have delayed and muddled the process because of the other alternatives."

"We're basically back to where we were five years ago. The key issue is a tunnel under Hingham Square."

—Alexander Macmillan, Hingham Greenbush coordinator

Even Transportation Secretary Kevin J. Sullivan, who only months ago questioned the cost associated with Greenbush, said this week he is encouraged that this third and final line of the Old Colony line will become a reality.

"The Army Corp has investigated 21 alternatives to restoring the Greenbush line and has come to the same conclusion as we have," Sullivan stated in a press release issued Tuesday.

UNWELCOME NEIGHBORS

The South Shore is pockmarked with more than 800 hazardous waste sites that sometimes pose a nightmare in otherwise quiet, peaceful neighborhoods. Among the worst are the 60 properties that have been abandoned by their owners or left in a state of disrepair. The state says it doesn't have the funds or the time to cleanup these sites and some of the neighbors are at their wit's end, getting little support from local and state officials. A special, eight-page report in today's issue focuses on these so called "default" sites as well as the federal Superfund sites scattered across the region.

Money for schools

Phone company to support public education

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A new phone company may have found a way to help Cohasset's schools generate revenue at a time when funding sources for education are few and far between.

Eastern Telephone, Inc. [E-Tel] is a Boston-based communications company which offers Bell Atlantic phone service at a lower cost Congress voted in 1996 to introduce competition into the local telephone market, making it possible for companies like E-Tel to purchase Bell Atlantic service at a wholesale rate and resell it to customers at a discount.

In an attempt to get community-minded people to switch their local phone service from Bell Atlantic, E-Tel has pledged to donate four percent of each customer's local phone bill to the Cohasset public schools. E-Tel customers would still see a one percent decrease on their local phone bill in addition to the four percent which will go to the public schools.

E-Tel currently has such programs in place in Stoughton and Sharon and is working to enter a number of other communities in addition to Cohasset.

At the school committee meeting last Tuesday, E-Tel director of community relations Jacqueline Murphy presented the idea to the committee.

"This is a utility that people have been paying for years and this is an opportunity to have it give back to the community," she said.

According to E-Tel figures which are based on a combined local and long distance monthly bill of $100, if 500 households in Cohasset switched to E-Tel, $24,000 would be donated annually to the public schools. That amount would double to $48,000 if 1,000 households switched.

School committee member Kathy Oftshun was wary of the prospect of endorsing one company over another, but Murphy assured her that E-Tel was not seeking an endorsement.

"We aren't asking for an endorsement," she said. "It's more along the lines of getting

Yard sale to benefit autism

A yard sale to benefit the Doug Flutie Jr. Autism Foundation will be held this Saturday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at 90 Old Pasture Road.

Brochures on autism will be available at the event and canisters will also be available for anyone wishing to make a donation. All proceeds from the sale and the canisters will benefit the Flutie Foundation.

"We really hope to raise awareness about autism," said Lorraine Tarpey, one of the organizers of the yard sale.

New activity aides for Osgood, Deer Hill

Two part-time activity aide positions have been created in the school district as a result of a school committee vote last Tuesday.

Supt. of schools Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said the funding for the positions was made possible due to the lower salaries of new teachers who have replaced established teachers with more tenure.

The aides will primarily be responsible for playground duty during lunch and recess. One aide will work at Osgood, while the other will be assigned to Deer Hill.

Due to the fact that the positions are part-time, whoever fills the jobs will not be eligible for benefits from the town.

"The benefit piece is important," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "If we can bring people on who can do this job without incurring benefits, then that's the way to go."

Hazardous waste disposal day

Recycling committee chairman Arthur Lehr announced that residents will be able to dispose of hazardous waste on Thurs. Sept. 18, from 9 a.m. to 12 noon.

Among the chemicals and other hazardous materials that residents can throw away at no cost are lye, poisonous sprays, oil, paint, and gasoline.

Lehr said the town pays for this service under its contract with the South Shore Recycling Collaborative and urged residents to take advantage of the service.

"It comes out of your taxes anyway," he said. "We usually get about 80 to 100 people who come down each time. It's important that people don't just throw these things into the environment."

For more information, call the Recycling Disposal Center at 383-9627.

Students flock to school for first day

Attendance was excellent for the first day of school last Thursday, according to Supt. of schools Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey.

Osgood welcomed 472 students back for the first day, with only 13 absences reported. Only 4 students missed their first day at Deer Hill, while 350 reported for their first day of classes. At the middle high school, only 8 students were absent, while 482 students reported to class.

"Everything went very smoothly," Malvey said. "It was if we never left."

Bus stop closings

Due to the sewer and water projects, various roads will be closed as the work progresses. As a result, some school bus stops will be affected. Have your child go to an alternate bus stop if your street is closed.

Riding with a purpose

Cohasset man bikes to help fight lung disease

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Riding a bike through the Cape is a great way to spend an early fall weekend, taking advantage of the benevolent climate before the unyielding winter sets in.

Using that ride to help others in need ensures that both body and spirit will benefit. As fitness has evolved from a craze into a way of life in the last 20 years, nonprofit groups have recognized the fundraising opportunities that biking trips and road races can offer.

The American Lung Association [ALA] was one of the first to notice that connection when it held its first Autumn Escape Bike Trek in 1984. The event has drawn bicyclists from all over Massachusetts who are committed to donating time and energy to help fight lung disease in return for a picturesque ride from Plymouth to Provincetown.

"What is unique and special about this event is that these people come together for a weekend, united in making a difference in the fight against lung disease."
—Martha Waldron, executive director of the ALA

Cohasset resident Larry Leff, 15 Cedar Ledge, is one such person. Though he initially decided to do the ride because he thought it would be a good way to spend some time with friends, he recognized that he would also be supporting the efforts of the ALA.

"I picked up a brochure for the ride in D'Angelos," he said about the event to be held Sept. 17-19. "I thought it was a great opportunity to get together with some friends for a nice ride in the Cape. It wasn't that noble of a cause, to be honest. But I recognized that the proceeds were going to a great cause, and so I was more than happy to raise the money."

More than 300 cyclists have signed up for the three-day, 160 mile trek, and each entrant pays a $35 registration fee and raises a minimum of $375 in pledges. A two-day Saturday to Sunday option is also available. Riders who participate at that level must raise a minimum of $275 in pledges.

"The money is used for a variety of purposes," said ALA spokesperson Rhonda Hamer. "It supports educational programs about how to combat asthma, and also goes to advocacy and research for fighting lung disease."

The monetary conditions for riding in the bike trek are not unique. Many charitable foundations which enter groups of runners in the Boston Marathon stipulate that entrants must raise a certain amount of pledges to compete in the race.

Leff said raising the money for the bike trek was a fairly simple proposition.

"I talked to a lot of friends, family, and coworkers who weren't doing the race," he said. "When people found out where the money was going, most were happy to donate. I was able to put it together in about two weeks."

What might prove more difficult than raising the money is the small matter of biking 160 miles over a three-day period. Leff said he has been training diligently, but admits the 160 miles will be a challenge.

"I'm doing about 100 miles a week in training, but nothing close to the 160," he said. "It's tough to ride on the weeknights because I've been working long hours in Boston. I end up doing almost all of my riding on the weekends."

Though the riders will no doubt be weary at the end of the ride each day, they will be well taken care of at night. The Autumn Escape will provide camp accommodations in Sandwich and Brewster, breakfasts and dinners, frequent rest stops, and plentiful snacks.

Leff and other cyclists will tour the Cape Cod Canal, the Falmouth Shining Sea Bike Trail, the Old King's Highway, and the Cape Cod National Seashore.

"I know that the first day is going to be really hilly as we ride through Manomet," said Leff, who moved to Cohasset from Hull in January.

The pledges that he collects will go to the ALA of Greater Norfolk County, so those in town with lung disease may directly benefit from his efforts and those of other Norfolk County riders. Though the Autumn Escape is a statewide event, each affiliate office benefits from the riders in their towns. No matter where they are from, riders can be secure in the knowledge that they helping a worthy cause.

"What is unique and special about this event is that these people come together for a weekend, united in making a difference in the fight against lung disease," said Martha Waldron, executive director of the ALA.

For more information about the Autumn Escape Bike Trek, or how you can fight lung disease, contact the ALA of Greater Norfolk County at (508) 668-6729 or e-mail at lungusa@worldnet.att.net.

Sewer hookups are not an exact science

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

To some people in town, the sewer is like a dream come true, ending a septic system nightmare that may have lasted years and cost thousands of dollars.

To others, the sewer lies just beyond reach, condemning them to expensive solutions with questionable results.

The power to decide who hooks up and who doesn't lies with the elected sewer commission, unless aggrieved property owners want to take their case to town meeting.

Homeowners on Mendel Road off Rt. 3A were back before the sewer commission this week for further clarification on why they won't be allowed to hook up to the Central Cohasset sewer through the condominiums at 100 Pond Street which they abut. 100 Pond Street is part of the expanded Central Cohasset sewer district.

The homeowners, who make up the five-unit Olde Farm Hill Condominium Association on Mendel Road, also question why empty lots can get a sewer stub allowing them to be built upon when existing homes cannot hookup.

Olde Farm Hill is willing to pay for the cost of hooking up but the sewer commission said its hands are tied.

"It's a district and we cannot spend money outside the district," commissioner Ray Kasperowicz said.

The septic system at Olde Farm Hill, which is an old estate whose buildings have been converted into individual homes, is in failure and creating a health emergency, according to the board of health. The homeowners there have built two septic systems. They also paid an engineer to design a third but were discouraged when the engineer said that too could fail.

"It's a district and we cannot spend money outside the district."
— sewer commissioner Ray Kasperowicz

But later in Tuesday's meeting, the sewer commission took under advisement a request to hook up from Bob Piepenbrink, 622 Chief Justice Cushing Way, whose property is outside the district but abuts Buttonwood Lane which is in the Central District.

Piepenbrink, who said he has three small children, said his system is in failure and his yard is in a low-lying area.

"The water table is so high, it would cost a lot of money to put a system in," he said.

Commissioner Gary Vanderweil said in light of the Mendel Road denial, his "knee jerk" reaction was to turn down the request. Kasperowicz said he worried if the commission "moved one iota off dead center" it would be targeted constantly for out-of-district hookup requests.

"This is a different situation than Mendel Road," commissioner Henry Rattenbury said. "This is not a solvable problem."

The commission said because Piepenbrink has a preexisting utility easement through a neighbor's yard to Buttonwood Lane there might be some hope.

"He's really half in and half out of the district," Vanderweil said.

100 Pond St.

In a related matter, commissioners told trustees at 100 Pond St. that the condominium association would have to pay for the sewer infrastructure, which may include pumps and a pumping station, needed for its 39 units because it is private property.

The association thinks its being unfairly treated because its neighbors on Woodland Drive and Holly Lane, for example, do not have to pay apart from betterments and assessments.

Vanderweil suggested 100 Pond write a letter to the commission that would then vote on the request but he didn't think members would change their minds.

"We taking it (sewer) to one point and everything up stream is yours," Vanderweil said.

Dan Couglin of Tutela Engineering, the sewer project manager, explained that the sewer mains installed at 100 Pond St. may not be up to standard. If the town took over the mains there it would need easements.

"It's an older system and it's going to require more maintenance. It's been in the ground a decade or more," he said.

The private treatment plant at 100 Pond St. would not be issued a ground water discharge permit by the Dept. of Environmental Protection, necessitating that it hook up to the sewer, officials said.

Historical review is next stop for Greenbush rail

"In the interest of best giving people on the South Shore more transportation alternatives, Greenbush is the way to go."

While talk of the cost derailing the project has dominated headlines in the last few months, it will not stop the train in its tracks, said Jon Carlisle a spokesman for Sullivan.

"This latest news is great news toward the eventual construction of the Greenbush line," Carlisle said.

Despite the Army Corps report — released last Friday and more than two years in the making — some Hingham officials say there's still a long way to go before the project gets the final "go-ahead."

The historical review process begins next week, and the town's lawsuit against the MBTA will be argued in early October.

"I still believe the irreversible, unmitigatable damage that surface diesel rail will do to communities along the Greenbush corridor in the towns of Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham far outweighs any of its benefits," said selectman Martin Crane. "We have been here before, and we're a long way from seeing heavy surface diesel rail tearing through the very heart of Hingham."

Other alternatives to rail restoration include expanded bus and improved commuter boat services. Some opponents to rail restoration advocate a multi-modal approach.

Now, ways to mitigate the environmental impacts of the project must be looked at if the MBTA decides to pursue the option for which it is seeking a permit from the Corps.

The purpose of mitigation is to make the project environmentally feasible in accordance with the National Historic Preservation Act (due to potential impacts on Hingham Square and other historic places) and the Clean Water Act (due to potential wetlands impacts).

While Larry Rosenberg, chief public affairs officer with the Army Corps in New England, says the MBTA was correct in selecting the alternative as it defined the project, i.e., Greenbush restoration, the proposal still has some hurdles to overcome in the event it becomes a reality.

"The document does not say the Army Corps will permit the project but does say the T was right in that the alternative (referring to Greenbush) is the only one that would meet the purposes of the project as the MBTA defined them," he said.

The Army Corps' role is to take an objective look at the permit request and its impact.

"The Corps will not take a position on whether the project is necessary," Rosenberg said.

"We have been here before, and we're a long way from seeing heavy surface diesel rail tearing through the very heart of Hingham."

— Hingham Selectman Martin Crane

The next step is to find mitigation that will provide the applicant with a way to permit the project. The purpose of mitigation is to ensure impacts will be avoided.

"At times the applicant cannot get there because mitigation becomes so expensive," Rosenberg said.

According to Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan, the stage has been set for a series of meetings scheduled to begin next Wednesday at the Army Corps' Concord office, when the formal historical review process starts. Subsequent meetings are likely to be scheduled at three-week intervals.

These latest reports, Brennan said, now allow the MBTA, and state and federal historic officials to move forward toward the final chapter of the environmental review of the project and focus on issues concerning historic Hingham.

"Now we are able to look at a focused and finite group of issues in the historic review as opposed to a wide array of issues."

According to the environmental report, the Corps will present a summary of previously acquired information regarding the historical review and outline the screening and analysis of various transportation alternatives to at-grade rail restoration.

Those meetings will involve several key players — the Corps, MBTA, Massachusetts Historical Commission and the federal Advisory Councill on Historic Preservation. Macmillan plans to attend, and other officials from communities located along the proposed train route will also receive invitations.

"We'll have to see what happens from there. There's no requirement that there be an agreement, but a discussion with the hope of one," Macmillan said. "However, there has to be an awareness of and discussion about the impacts of the (Greenbush proposal), the alternatives and mitigation measures. We're basically back to where we were five years ago. The key issue is a tunnel under Hingham Square."

If no agreement is reached, the Army Corps still has to sign off on the permit. According to Macmillan, that would be unlikely in the event the Advisory Councill on Historic Preservation and the Massachusetts Historical Commission say the MBTA's mitigation package "doesn't cut it or a tunnel is needed under Hingham Square."

Hingham officials have long opposed Greenbush restoration, but feel a tunnel under the historic district is necessary to avoid damages they feel would be caused by surface rail.

The historic review process will include identifying the areas of potential effect — historic properties that could be impacted by train noise, pollution and vibration. After pinpointing specific impacts, Brennan said project planners must come up with the means and methods to mitigate, lessen or avoid impacting historic properties. Mitigation can vary from building sound walls, and visual buffers and installing vibration mats to constructing a tunnel, Brennan said.

"For historic review purposes, for federal environmental review and for federal wetlands issues, the Army Corps has said that commuter rail is the only alternative it's going to look at," Brennan said.

At the end of that process the MBTA, the Army Corps, the Massachusetts Historical Commission and the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation (the federal component of the Mass Historical Commission) must sign a memorandum of agreement.

That agreement will then be written as the final and long awaited last chapter to the MBTA's Environmental Impact Report. "The memorandum of agreement will become the final chapter of the MEPA document," he said.

Brennan said he expects that document to be completed in the spring of 2000. When the final chapter is complete, the state appointed Citizens Advisory Committee will be reconvened to review the chapter on historic review before it is sent to the state Secretary of Environmental Affairs who will decide whether or not to issue a certificate approving the project. If the certificate is given without delay, Brennan said project planners will speed up the design of the line and move into construction, with the T still expecting to start service on the Greenbush line by the end of 2002.

But another hurdle lies ahead. On Oct. 5, Hingham's lawsuit against the MBTA will be argued in the United States District Court in Boston.

The town filed the lawsuit in 1996, accusing the MBTA of attempting to evade strict federal environmental laws — which could have required a tunnel under Hingham Square — by proposing to build the Greenbush branch with state funds alone.

The argument revolves around the fact that partway through the project, the transit authority changed tracks and decided to use state money to fund the project rather than continue using federal funding.

"The question is, what are the pressures to build a tunnel if the MBTA wants the train?" asked Macmillan, who anticipates a number of appeals before the lawsuit is resolved. But should the Town of Hingham ultimately prevail, a federal environment review would ensue.

"There's a much higher standard (at this point)," Macmillan said. "Then the Federal Transit Authority would be back in the picture."

Cohasset Greenbush mitigation plans are altered

Some vibration mats are absent in new version

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Talk of scrapping the long-debated Greenbush commuter rail line has become rampant in the last couple of months, due in large part to Gov. Paul Cellucci's comments that mitigation for the proposed line might become cost prohibitive. Talk is often just that, however, and Cohasset mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber cautioned that the committee must proceed as if Greenbush is going forward.

"We shouldn't gear our work around something that might happen in the future," he said. "As long as the MBTA is spending money with Sverdrup [an engineering firm hired by the MBTA] and doing drawings, we should stay current."

In an attempt to keep the committee up to speed with the project, Gruber had reviewed the latest MBTA mitigation plans. He was not entirely pleased with changes he found from previous versions.

"I compared the new version with the old version, and a good deal of the vibration mitigation was gone in the new version," Gruber said. "To put it mildly, I was upset."

Absent in the most recent MBTA drawings were vibration mats which were to be extended to businesses on Ripley Road and in Cohasset Village. The mats are designed to absorb the tremendous vibrations which emanate from the tracks when the commuter rail passes through.

Though the MBTA did not specify the reasoning behind the decision to remove the vibration mats, Gruber surmised that the constitution of the soil along the rail bed likely played a large role in its thinking.

"Originally, the MBTA took one test boring behind the Osgood school, which is sandy soil," he said. "The most benign soil for transmission of vibration is sandy soil because the particles are spread out and the vibrations are absorbed rather easily. If you're standing on bedrock, however, you can feel vibrations from 1,000 feet away."

While the MBTA's engineers seem to have banked on the sandy soil as sufficient mitigation for vibration, Gruber says there may be other factors which they needs to take into account.

"If they're going to get rid of vibration mitigation, they have to show us their data."
— Tom Gruber, mitigation committee chairman

"There are two things they may not have considered," he said. "First, there is ledge adjacent to the sandy soil, and they're going to have to realistically determine the amount of sand there is before you hit ledge. Secondly, there are high water levels in that area, especially in James Brook. When the water is high enough it becomes the transmitter of vibrations. Vibrations travel much more freely in water than they do in sand."

Selectman Fred Koed was dismayed that the MBTA did not notify the mitigation committee of the alterations to the plans.

"There's no procedure for them to tell us when they make changes," he said.

He and Gruber volunteered to go to Boston to meet with MBTA officials regarding the changes to the mitigation plans. If MBTA officials are able to come to Cohasset to discuss the changes, selectman Diane Sullivan will join them.

"If they're going to get rid of vibration mitigation, they have to show us their data," Gruber said. "They claim that they took a number of test borings along the rail bed subsequent to the Osgood test. Until they show us the numbers, we have to question those findings."

Another cause of concern for the mitigation committee was the MBTA's proposal for the replication of wetland areas. The replicated wetlands are necessary because the commuter rail line is slated to run through areas currently designated as wetlands.

"The MBTA is proposing 78,000 square feet of replicated wetlands for the Greenbush project, of which 45,000 to 48,000 will be created on Cohasset land," said conservation commission chairman Michael Dick.

Those replicated wetlands are to be created at the sand pits north of Barnes Field on Main St., which is one of the few town-owned, undeveloped tracts of land in Cohasset. The site had been mentioned as a possible location for a new library and senior housing in the past, and the idea of using the land for replicated wetlands bothered some town officials.

"Is it our only alternative?" Koed asked. "There's a lot of land along the tracks that cannot be developed and maybe that's a place that wetlands can be created."

"I'd hate to see us take one of the last pieces of undeveloped land owned by the town and use it for the replication of wetlands," Sullivan said.

Gruber said that using the land for wetlands could very well be a positive use for the town. He cautioned, however, that any use of that land should be studied carefully.

"To give up what little land we have is a very weighty decision," he said. "There are a lot of things that the land could be used for, but replicating wetlands has a number of good uses as well."

According to Dick, the MBTA has promised to replicate an acre of wetland for every acre of wetland which is taken for the commuter rail. The MBTA also will file a Notice of Intent [NOI] with each town's conservation commission, but Dick said that the prospect of the project being halted by any town's conservation commission is extremely unlikely.

"We will review their plans without much latitude," he said. "There's very little room for us to rule because we can be overruled by the state Department of Environmental Protection [DEP]. My guess is that the MBTA will get what it wants."

ZBA: marina expanded into a residential zone

Owner will likely appeal, officials say

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Ready, set, appeal.

An appeal in superior court undoubtedly looms on the horizon in the ongoing legal battle between Cohasset Harbor Marina [CHM] owner Paul Trendowicz and Border Ave. residents Michael and Victoria Hurley and Theodore and Kathleen Kilkuskie. At issue is a 1969 color-coded town zoning map where the yellow coloring —indicating a residential district — extends to the thread or middle of Bailey's Creek.

The zoning board ruled as expected at its Tuesday night meeting, declaring that CHM has expanded illegally into a residential zone. The issue came before the zoning board as the result of an appeal by the Hurleys of building commissioner Bob Egan's decision to allow the marina expansion to proceed.

The decision came as little more than a formality. At its meeting last month, the zoning board determined that the town intended on having the residential district go to the thread of the channel. Once that determination was made, the fate of CHM owner Paul Trendowicz was essentially sealed, at least for this round of legal maneuvering.

Under the town bylaws, marinas are prohibited in a residential district without a variance. Cohasset Harbor Marina is in a light industrial zone, but the zoning board's decision means that it has expanded into a residential zone.

In explaining its decision, zoning board member Benjamin Lacy said he found nothing to corroborate the opinion of town counsel and CHM lawyers that the yellow coloring was a printer's error.

"CHM offered no evidence to support the theory of a printer's error," he said. "In 1955, no bodies of water were colored anything on the zoning map. That changed in 1969 and we have to honor the plain coloring and say it was yellow intentionally."

Zoning board chairman Woody Chittick agreed that the change[illegible] zoning maps between 1955 and 19[illegible] must have been intentional.

"The issue of threat to waterways appeared in 1969, and it must have been scrutinized," he said.

Under the town bylaws, marinas are prohibited in a residential district without a variance. Cohasset Harbor Marina is in a light industrial zone, but the zoning board's decision means that it has expanded into a residential zone.

"The yellow covers the entire area where work is being done," Lacy said. "The extension and enlargement of the dock was for a use for which the owners should have come before the zoning board for a special permit. The zoning board finds that the building commissioner should have issued a work order at the petitioners' request."

The stop order will be deferred for 30 days following the filing of the zoning board decision. Trendowicz can appeal the decision to superior court or seek a variance from the zoning board within those 30 days.

Lacy added that Trendowicz would not have to tear down any of Water commission seeking the next step

Considering options for cleanup of Depot Court gas leak

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The gas leak underneath Depot Court does not affect the town water supply, a fact for which all Cohasset residents can be thankful. The reservoir is located off of King St., near route 3A, while the contamination is situated across town in Cohasset Village.

The water commission, however, is still concerned that the leak is a threat to the Elm Meadow and Sohier Street wellfields, which may be used in the future as a backup source of water for the town.

The Elm Meadow wellfield is located within 200 feet of the site and has been offline since 1989. The Sohier wellfield is located approximately 1000 feet from the site and is also inactive.

"The water commission is looking to rehabilitate the wellfields," said Lou Reed of Norfolk Environmental, an environmental engineering and consulting firm hired by the town to study the gas leak. "We're advising the water commission on the steps they can take to speed up the remediation process so the site doesn't pose a threat to the wellfields."

According to Reed, a couple of gasoline tanks leaked during the mid-1980s at the former Brown's Auto Repair gas station, at the corner of Depot Court and Ripley Road.

Selectman Fred Koed saw the contamination firsthand during his days as water commissioner.

"We opened the street up and hit gasoline in 1996," he said. "The fire department and the state came down and we were told to put the contaminated soil back in."

While town officials are quite aware that the contamination exists, they are less certain of how to get it cleaned up. Cleanup is necessary not just for environmental reasons but also because the wellfields may be reactivated in the future.

"In an emergency, the wellfields could provide enough water so that people could get their domestic water use, such as brushing their teeth and taking showers," Koed said. "Right now, we'd have to connect into the water supply of Scituate or Hingham. That may not be possible in the case of a drought."

Water commissioner John McNabb has contacted the state Department of Environmental Protection [DEP] regarding the site, but DEP officials have said the site is not a high enough priority for the state to clean up in the near future.

"We received an inquiry a couple of weeks ago regarding the Depot Court site," said DEP spokesperson John Fitzgerald. "The site is not the highest priority for cleanup because the leak cannot impact the reservoir. It is a potential threat to the town water supply because of the wellfields, but neither wellfield is active at the present time."

The former gas station is categorized by the DEP as a Default Tier 1B site, which means that those responsible for the contamination have not proceeded with the cleanup according to state regulations.

"If we can find the people responsible, we can compel them to pay to clean up the site," Fitzgerald said. "Unfortunately, those people often can not be found or do not have the means to pay for the cleanup."

Fitzgerald said there are 8,000 sites in the state similar to the Brown's Auto Repair site. While that site is currently not a high priority, that would likely change should the water commission decide to reactivate one or both of the wellfields.

"If the wellfields are used in the future, then the potential threat of contamination to the drinking supply would increase," Fitzgerald said.

Reed said that the extent of the contamination underneath Depot Court will have to be determined to get an understanding of how the wellfields might be affected.

"It's unclear what direction the groundwater is flowing," he said. "Three reports say three different things."

ZBA: marina expanded into a residential zone

the slips which he has already added to the floating dock because there was no way for him to know what the zoning board would decide.

Egan said that even if a stop work order were implemented after 30 days, it would not necessarily affect the marina in the near future.

"The floating docks are already built and will probably be tucked away for winter in a month anyway," he said. "The marina people have time to take their next step."

The zoning board also ruled that Trendowicz would have to seek setback and floodplain variances for a small storage shed on his property.

The Kilkuskies discovered that the shed was on their property at 126 Border St. and Trendowicz was forced to move it. When he moved it, however, he put it within two feet of the required setback. The shed is also located on the floodplain, which requires an additional special permit.

Lacy said that Trendowicz created another set of problems by moving the shed off of the Kilkuskie property and placing it in an area which still requires permits.

"He [Trendowicz] hasn't solved anything yet," he said.

Volunteers sought for open space committee

The Open Space and Recreation Committee is looking for two members to help revise and update Cohasset's Open Space and Recreation Plan, and also to help implement the open space and recreation goals outlined in the report. Anyone who is action-oriented, and wants to help improve Cohasset's open space and recreation opportunities, is welcome to apply. Call Debbie Cook, chairman, at 383-6313.

AROUND TOWN

TOP YOUNG SAILOR

Andrew Flynn, 12, who sails an optimist in the blue fleet for the Wild Harbor Yacht Club in North Falmouth has had a phenomenal summer!

In the Buzzards Bay Optimist Series Andrew placed first at Wild Harbor Yacht Club, first at Quisset Yacht Club, first at Chappaquoit Yacht Club and third at Megansett Yacht Club

At the Falmouth Yacht Club Regatta he placed second in his fleet and third overall. At the Hyannis Yacht Club Regatta he placed second in his fleet and fifth overall at the SMSA Champs in Waquoit he placed first in his fleet and second overall.

At the Atlantic Coast Championship in Hyannis he placed seventh in his fleet and 24th overall.

Andrew has qualified for the World and European Team Trials which will be held in Atlantic City in April 2000.

Just wait until Andrew returns to Cohasset, he'll be receiving standing ovations all over the place! Well deserved we might add!

MIT GRADUATE

Christa Ansbergs, a 1994 CHS grad, graduated from MIT in June, and everyone is ever-so-proud of her!

Christa was a member of the fencing team, vice president of her dormitory, a member of the Assassin's Guild, she played interdorm hockey—what a busy gal!

We wish you all the best as you enter the next phase of your life, Christa.

CLASS OF 1959 REUNION

The CHS Class of 1959 held their 40th reunion recently, and what a super one it was! The weather although hot was perfect for the events that were held.

The weekend began with a cocktail party at the home of Francis and Gail Collins (what a great place to meet all of their former classmates)—there were people from, Texas, California, Maine, all over the country!

On Saturday evening they all put together a clambake at the home of Chris and Karen Ford—what fun!

MAKING THE CUT

Deer Hill sixth-grader Michael Barnes gets a haircut at Pat's Barber Shop on Ripley Road before the first-day of school last week.

Chris got out his paddle boat and his motor boat, so all of those who hadn't been near the Gulf or the ocean for years got a chance to really love it again. Then all got together under the tent for a sumptuous meal. At the end of the night they honored their classmates that had passed away (Ann Pompeo, Harry Harrington, Linda Clarke Wallace and Carolyn Sargent) by floating a wreath of flowers with four candles.

There was the wind-up brunch at our home and more than one person left with a tear in their eye, wishing it could go on forever—why do some weekends fly by like that?

Everyone vowed to do the same thing again in five years, though they wondered why they had to wait so long!

ANOTHER PIANO SEASON

Priscilla Daniels is beginning another season instructing piano lessons in her home. Priscilla is a professional pianist and eacher of pianoforte and has had many students over the years. She is known for encouraging her students to appreciate all of the fine things in music, for letting them improvise and compose. As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression.

As any former student can tell you, she makes learning to play the piano a wonderful experience!

If you would like to know more, call 383-1487.

BENEFIT CLAMBAKE

Don't forget that this Saturday is the annual Christine Burke Scholarship Fund clambake from noon to sunset at Sandy Beach. There will be live entertainment, dinner will be served at 3 p.m., and lots of fun and fond memories will be had by all. The cost is $30 per person and checks are to be made out to American Legion Post 118.

NEW GRANDDAUGHTER

Received a wonderful call from Blanche Whitman the other day, she and Peter are grandparents! Now that's really exciting, but even more so is the fact that the Whitman's can finally have a little girl in their midst! On Aug. 28, as the first pitch of the Red Sox game was being thrown Emily Rose Whitman was born!

Of course, Mom and Dad, Christina and Adam, are besides themselves with joy, and you can bet that as soon as possible, you'll be seeing Emily Rose being wheeled around town—the question is who gets to take her on her first ride?

Congratulations to all of you!

Back-to-school

How good are our schools? That's the question Life magazine asked, and it answered with a cliche that can be heard at coffee shops, PTA meetings and wherever public education is a hot topic: "They Face A Crisis."

Life cited overcrowded classrooms, outdated curricula, underpaid teachers and lax standards in a full issue devoted to the state of America's schools. It complained of the excessively casual dress worn even by high school students in wealthy suburban schools.

Such complaints are nothing new, nor were they all that fresh when Life's allegations initially appeared: 1950.

We Americans tend to be simple-minded about the complicated subject of public education. We consider ourselves experts on education simply because we attended school and our taxes pay for them. But most of us attended school many years ago. We were too young then to know if we were getting a good education and we're too old now to remember much of what really went on in the schools of our youth. Nor do most of us know anything more than what we read about today's schools: In many South Shore communities, as few as 20 percent of residents have school-aged children.

In the absence of direct knowledge, we allow rhetoric and cliches to paint a picture of today's crisis in education. And we generalize, often ascribing to all schools the images of violence, neglect and educational pathology that are truly present only in the nation's poorest urban neighborhoods.

"Is your kid's school good enough?" asks Life. "Was yours better?"

An objective answer to the second question is probably no. That's certainly the case for the millions of black children stuck in segregated schools in the '50s and '60s, and for millions of all races in poor rural districts.

The expectations were different a couple of generations ago. Most students in most schools weren't expected to go on to college. High school was mostly preparation not for a lifetime of learning, but for a lifetime of mundane toil on the farm or at the factory. Critical thinking skills weren't encouraged, let alone required, for a job on the assembly line.

Today, high school is preparation for college, which is preparation for a lifetime of on-the-job learning in what for most people will be a succession of careers. Critical thinking, communications skills, working in groups, independent research and mastering technology are fundamental parts of an adequate education for the 21st century.

For most students, most of the schools on the South Shore are more demanding than those of a generation ago. Longer summer reading lists and written assignments have taken some of the fun out of summer vacation. Excessive homework has sparked parent protests in some area towns. MCAS and other standardized tests have added to student stress.

The relevant question is not "are our schools better than they used to be?" It is "are our schools as good as they need to be?"

Answering that question takes more than childhood schoolhouse memories or bleak headlines turned into generalized scorn. It takes more than standardized test scores, the rhetoric of politicians or the reports of bureaucrats.

To find out if our schools are good enough, you've got to get involved. Go to the school, talk to the teachers, read the textbooks and understand the homework assignments.

You might not find out if today's schools are good enough - a moving target, difficult to define - but you might learn something more important: what it will make sure our schools keep getting better.

Swim, diving team support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

To paraphrase the current first lady, "it takes a village to run a swim and diving meet." The Cohasset Swim and Diving Team (CSDT) Board of Directors wishes to thank the numerous staff, coaches, and volunteers whose contributions have led to an exciting, successful season.

The small army of volunteers needed to run the meets are organized by various "heads" — without these volunteers the meets would not have been possible. Special thanks go out to Peter Berg, Barbara Baumgarten, Jo Ann Lehr, Cheryl Bugely, Julia Drybanski, Patricia O'Brien, Nancy Roach, Leslie Faber, Jane Ninde, Irene Barry, Lyn Previte, Paula Dickenson, Lisa Marder-Stevenson, Karen Doonan, Ann Musto, Mary Foley, Martha Ogrodnik, Kathy Yeager, and Kasey McCarthy. Thanks to the countless others who volunteered as well.

Barbara Orsini wrote engaging, informative articles for us which was no small task. Capturing the excitement of the meets requires a special talent, and Barbara has it. Thanks.

Peter Berg represented the CSDT on the South Shore League (SSL) and successfully organized a mammoth Championship event. The board is most appreciative and grateful for his dedication, time and effort.

The swim team won the SSL Championships which will bring the trophy to town for the next year! Our divers also provided some of the best diving in the league. Congratulations to all for a job well done.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC has compiled the roll call attendance records of the state's 158 representatives for the 1999 session through September 3. The records of local representatives are included in this week's report. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

The House has held 150 roll calls through September 3, BHRC tabulates the number of roll calls on which each representative was present and voting and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total roll call votes held. That percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record.

In the House, 23 quorum calls used to gather a majority of members onto the House floor to conduct business, are also included in the 150 roll calls. On these quorum calls, members simply vote "present" in order to indicate their presence in the chamber. When a representative does not indicate his presence on a quorum call, we count that as a roll call absence.

John Stasik (D-Framingham) has the worst attendance record with 80.1 percent. Following Stasik, the top ten worst attendance record list includes Chris Hodgkins (D-Lee) 81.3 percent; Bob DeLeo (D-Winthrop) 82.0 percent; Tom Kennedy (D-Brockton) 84.0 percent; Christine Canavan (D-Brockton) 84.7 percent; Walter DeFilippi (R-West Springfield) 85.3 percent; Steve Angelo (D-Saugus) 86.0 percent; Tom George (R-Yarmouth) 86.0 percent; David Linsky (D-Natick) 86.1 percent; and David Flynn (D-Bridgewater) 86.7 percent. Linsky did not take office until June so his record is based on 36 roll call votes. He missed five of those.

REPRESENTATIVES' ATTENDANCE RECORDS: The number listed in parentheses next to each representatives' name indicates the number of roll calls he missed. The percent listed is the percentage of roll calls for which the representative was present and voting.

Cohasset kids say goodbye to summer

Phone company to support public education

money for education and telling the community that this is an option that is out there. We also want to let the school committees know what's happening."

School committee member Pat Martin brought the idea to the committee's attention and said that it could support education rather than endorsing E-Tel.

"When I go to the supermarket, if I see two cereals that look the same and taste the same and the only difference is that one has a box top for education, that's the one I buy," she said. "This is the same type of thing. The business is giving to support their bottom line, but it's to our benefit as well."

Oftshun loved the idea of getting money for the town's schools but wondered what role the school committee is to play.

"It sounds irrefutable, more money for our schools," she said. "But do we have to be involved?"

Supt. of schools Dr. Edward Malvey told school committee members that they could support the program without specifically supporting E-Tel.

"I think it's a marvelous idea," he told the committee. "You can vote to endorse the concept rather than a specific company. The rules of the game have changed in regards to funding education and programs like this will be crucial in the future."

Martin said that E-Tel is willing to do all of the publicity for the program and is developing a town-wide mailing which will explain the program to Cohasset residents.

"There's no cost to us, and very little downside," she said.

"Customers will be paying less for their phone service and four percent of their phone bills will go to the local schools," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "It certainly sounds like a win-win proposition."

Because it is unlawful for companies to give money to a town's school committee directly, E-Tel would have to donate the money to an account held by the Parent School Organization [PSO]. Companies who wish to donate money will contact the alternative funding subcommittee, who will then forward programs to the school committee for its approval.

DeGiacomo said that the school committee needs to be sure that the program won't get the town in any sort of legal trouble.

"I'm willing to go as far as we can to get money for the schools without crossing that line," he said. "We need to put some thought into this and check with town counsel. How far do we push the envelope?"

The committee endorsed the idea of encouraging socially responsible companies to get in touch with the alternative funding subcommittee regarding donations to the town's public schools, pending approval by town counsel.

"People are already paying this money," Murphy assured the committee. "Their phone bills will clearly show how much money is going to the schools."

Murphy added that the four-percent contribution can be claimed as a charitable tax write-off. She also wanted to assure residents that their phone service will not be affected should they switch to E-Tel.

"Bell Atlantic will continue to provide the wires, switches, and field technicians that manage the telephone infrastructure that comes into the home," she said. "Operators and directory assistance will continue to be provided by Bell Atlantic as well. No one's phone number will change if they switch. You get a bill from us every month, and we, in turn, compensate Bell Atlantic for the wholesale service that is brought into your home."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Naders should not get special treatment

TO THE EDITOR:

After reading the article about the Nader family's construction dilemma, I feel compelled to respond. In the last sentence of the article, Mrs. Nader stated that she couldn't believe that, "all this has happened over issues that really aren't that important." Unfortunately, Mrs. Nader does not understand that protecting the environment, the wetlands, and the ground water is very important to the citizens of Cohasset. That's why the Wetlands Protection Acts exists, and that's why the Cohasset Town Meeting has twice voted for the Cohasset Wetlands Protection Bylaw, which gives even greater protection to the wetlands and surrounding areas. Everyone else in Cohasset is bound by those regulations, which the Cohasset Conservation Commission strives to enforce consistently. They are bound by law to uphold those regulations, and they take their commitment seriously.

The Naders have blatantly disregarded town regulations, as well as state regulations. Since the Naders have filed numerous lawsuits against the town, the Conservation Commission has chosen not to respond to their pathetic media campaign. I am tired of reading such one-sided coverage of the Naders' plight. They created the mess they are in. Every maneuver they have attempted to circumvent the process, has backfired on them. They have resorted to a public relations campaign to try to win sympathy and embarrass the hard-working volunteers who have made numerous efforts to compromise with them. The Naders fail to mention that they have brought an additional 18 acres abutting this property. If they are only interested in building their dream house, couldn't they find a better place to locate it?

Buying a house is Cohasset is the American dream, but "caveat emptor" should be the basis for any major purchase. Why were three extensions issued to the Order of Conditions over 10 years, yet no construction started? Why was a final extension issued which specified that construction must be completed by Oct.1, 1998? Since the footing for the foundation were not poured until Sept. 29, 1998, did Mr. Nader believe he could complete construction within two days as the permit specifically stated? Most intelligent buyers would want to know the answers to these questions before investing their life savings.

Mr. Nader's additional expenses are due to his refusal to stop construction when so ordered by the Commission. His mounting legal bills are due to his initiation of numerous lawsuits. We all make mistakes, and some of them can be very costly. I am sick and tired of people making excuses for their own behavior, and blaming others for their mistakes. Children are being taught in school that they are responsible for their own behavior. They will be held accountable for their actions. The Naders are trying to blame everyone else for their "mistakes."

Why should they be afforded special treatment that is denied to other Cohasset residents who do the research, follow the regulations and obey the laws?

This is obviously a very complicated and emotional issue, which apparently cannot be settled rationally. Let the courts decide, and stop maligning the members of the Conservation Commission who are doing their best to protect the town.

CHL agrees to relinquish its site assignment

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The board of health was scheduled to open site assignment hearings for the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill last night at 7 p.m. after The Mariner went to press. But the hearings became a mere formality. CHL owner Paul Barry has agreed to relinquish the site assignment for the landfill without conditions.

The site assignment is the chief local authorization that allows landfills to operate within a town. Landfills cannot legally operate without a valid site assignment. Although CHL's decision to relinquish the site assignment shuts down the current landfill permanently, it has no effect on the company's application for a new landfill in Area V, an unused section of the facility.

In a letter to the board of health dated Sept. 1, 1999, CHL attorney Anton Moehrke stated CHL's intention to surrender the site assignment voluntarily.

"CHL hereby voluntarily surrenders and forever relinquishes the site assignment granted to its predecessor in title on June 29, 1976 by the board of health to the town of Cohasset," Moehrke wrote in the letter.

According to the letter, the relinquishment of the site assignment conforms to all state laws, and will be recorded in Land Court. CHL also waived its right to appeal its decision, although the letter states that CHL is not admitting to doing any harm to the town.

"In surrendering and relinquishing the site assignment, CHL makes no concessions or waiver with regard to any allegations of harm to the public health, safety or the environment from the current landfill; CHL expressly denies that the landfill has caused an adverse impact of any kind," according to Moehrke's letter.

In another letter dated Sept. 7, Barry agrees to relinquish the site assignment in accordance with the terms outlined in Moehrke's letter.

Relinquishing the site assignment ends years of efforts by the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) to permanently shut down CHL.

"SAFE is happy because our goal has been to rescind CHL's site assignment," said John K. McNabb Jr. Vice President of SAFE. "This avoids the need for a potentially long, drawn-out hearing. Still, I am sorry that we won't get the chance to put the additional environmental damage caused by the landfill on the record, but everyone knows about it anyway. This is very good for the town."

Board of health Chairman Alix White said there would still be a hearing, but it would be conducted chiefly for the purpose of voting to accept CHL's decision to relinquish the site assignment. White said most of the work was already done, and the vote was merely a final bit of housecleaning.

In a telephone interview, Moehrke said no one from CHL planned to attend the hearing. He confirmed that the decision to relinquish the site assignment would have no effect on the application for a new landfill in Area V.

With the main landfill shut down permanently, McNabb and SAFE are focusing their efforts on convincing DEP to require a comprehensive closure plan for the facility, and preventing the creation of a new landfill in Area V. McNabb said the only way to ensure that CHL does not open a new landfill in Area V is to change the zoning. McNabb plans to submit two articles at the fall town meeting.

One article would change the zoning in CHL's location from industrial to some other form of zoning. State laws prevent towns from excluding landfills in industrial zones. The second bylaw would amend zoning laws requiring no discharge of any kind into a wetland. CHL has been seeking authorization for a major expansion into Area V since 1996.

The board of health rejected the original Area V expansion, and CHL appealed, but ultimately lost in court. When CHL exhausted all appeals on July 14, 1999, it immediately submitted a Notice of Project Change with the state, beginning the permitting process for a revised expansion into Area V. CHL has been closed since July, 1998.

In late 1997, McNabb discovered that CHL had not filed a special permit with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds to operate a landfill in town. Failure to file the permit meant the landfill had never operated legally. It also meant that CHL had violated the town's water protection bylaw, passed after the landfill began operating. The bylaw prohibits landfills from operating within a designated district. A major portion of CHL sits within the water protection district. The town ordered CHL to cease operations because it lacked a special permit. CHL appealed the decision, but a Norfolk Superior Court judge upheld the town's order.

WALKING INTO TROUBLE

People who walk regularly as part of an exercise regimen and experience chronic lower-back pain as a result may find that the problem stems from the mechanics of their stride. People who pronate will find that their feet roll inward with each step. As a result, the whole leg rotates inward. This action, in turn, exerts a pull on the stabilizing muscles in the hip that attach to the lower part of the spine. The chiropractor can diagnose pronation by having patients walk a few steps in their normal strides. If it is then indicated that pronation is at the root of lower-back pain, steps can be taken to correct the problem and alleviate the imbalances it causes.

Make regular chiropractic care your first choice, not a last resort. Experience the natural health benefits of chiropractic care for your entire family. You don't have to suffer needlessly. Horticultural workshop slated

The Horticultural Workshop will be held on Sept. 14 from 9:30-11:30 a.m. at the Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage.

The Horticulture Committee will open its 1999 season with a "Plant Swap." Late summer is an ideal time for dividing perennials and the swap is the ideal opportunity to share plants with fellow gardeners. In exchange, you may take some special plants to home to enhance your fellow gardeners. In exchange you make take some special plants home to enhance your own garden.

Bring perennials, vines, groundcovers, ferns, grasses, herbs, shrubs or even trees. Label as best you can, but don't worry, someone will helps us with identification.

Piano lessons resume

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson-schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano. For more information, call 383-1487.

Auditions for dramatic club production

The Cohasset Dramatic Club's holiday auditions for "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way to The Forum," the hysterical, historical comedy set 200 years before the Christian era in Rome, directed by Doug Trudeau.

The club needs eight men, ages open, with good movement and some singing; eight women, ages 18-30 with good movement, singing and dancing; one 40-plus, stern with minor singing; one 20s, dimwitted, good singing; plus a various ensemble of men and women of various ages, not all singing.

Auditions will be held at Cohasset Town Hall on the following dates: Sunday, Sept. 12, 6-9 p.m.; and Monday, Sept. 13, 7-9 p.m.

Call backs are Tuesday, Sept. 14, 7-9 p.m.

How to organize your life

Whether the problem is closet chaos, desktop disorder, juggling appointments, balancing a budget, missing receipts or missing deadlines, it is necessary to put order in our lives. Time management expert, Andrew Swartz, will tell us how to do it in a program, sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset entitled, "Get Organized, Control Clutter and Stop Procrastinating!" which will take place on Tuesday, Sept. 14 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Residence/Bancroft Hall. Admission is $6.

Swartz promises to teach participants how to plan and organize their schedules and how to analyze their own use of time to become more efficient. Examples of the advice we can expect to receive are: Discover what time of day is your "prime time," when you are most awake and full of energy. Use this time for any serious thinking and making important decisions. Eliminate one time-wasting factor from your life each week. Get tough about time. Learn to respect that time is limited. Remember that people are visual. Organize your home and office by, for example, using colored file folders.

Toxic trouble

Neighborhood children play in their backyard, abutting the former Continental Mattress Company in Abington, a hazardous site in default. It is one of countless sites on the South Shore that fails to get the attention and cleanup for various reasons, most often because the owners have defaulted on the property. The state's Department of Environmental Protection says its hands are tied and doesn't have the resources to clean up these smaller sites.

STAFF WRITERS

Ted Malloy lives next to an abandoned factory that poses more dangers than a Stephen King house of horrors.

Heavy steel sheets teeter on the roof of the Continental Mattress Company and occasionally tumble into his yard with a heavy thump.

Lead paint slowly leaches into the soil of his vegetable garden from a 14-foot-high, bulging brick wall that threatens to collapse into the area where he tills the soil.

A patch of land just a few yards away from the area where his grandchildren and other toddlers play is tainted with industrial toxins.

And anyone who creeps inside the factory, through doors with broken locks or through shattered windows, can get lost and injured.

"I've complained to everyone, from the board of health to the board of selectmen to the state attorney general," says Malloy, a 68-year-old Abington resident.

Yet local and state authorities have done little to protect him or the children who romp in the shadow of the dilapidated building.

"I've invested my life's savings in this home," he says of his neatly trimmed property. "I'm concerned about the kids' safety. But I'm just tired of fighting the system."

A system of neglect

That system has not only failed to protect Malloy and his family, it has neglected to safeguard hundreds of other residents on the South Shore, who live near shuttered factories, aging gas stations and other toxin-filled properties tucked into quiet neighborhoods.

Scattered across the region in an uneven pattern, more than 800 hazardous waste sites and spills mar the 13 towns covered by the Mariner Newspapers, according to an analysis of data from the state Department of Environmental Protection.

Polluted 'default' sites taint South Shore

The ominous looking onsite sewage treatment facility.

Braintree, Weymouth and Hingham harbor more toxic sites than any other towns on the South Shore while Pembroke, Scituate and Holbrook have been littered with the fewest.

Many consist of gas stations with underground storage tanks that may be leaking fuel, which may put surrounding soil and water in jeopardy. In some cases, government agencies such as public works departments accidentally contaminated the environment.

Whoever caused the problem or purchased contaminated property is responsible for cleaning it up within five years.

The good news is hundreds of contaminated sites have been rehabilitated, including those that pose the worst threat — like the Baird & McGuire federal Superfund site in Holbrook, where the U.S. Environmental Agency has spent a total of $130 million in taxpayer money cleaning soil and groundwater.

But many responsible parties have taken far longer than the law allows, asking for extensions and sometimes dragging the process out for more than a decade.

For instance, rusty barrels, broken down cars and a mountain of tires stain the property at 271 Washington St. in Norwell, where Atlantic Towing Co. once operated.

First reported to the state in 1988, the toxic site stands 700 feet from the town's water supply and tests performed years ago revealed benzene and another chemical used to clean auto parts in the groundwater.

Yet the site still hasn't been cleaned up. The owner of Atlantic Towing went bankrupt and a bank auctioned off the property.

"I'm very unhappy," says Michael Kelly, a neighbor who has been complaining for years about the site.

"Those tires go up in flames, my house will go up in smoke."

Some people responsible for the cleanup of toxic sites like Atlantic Towing and Continental Mattress in Abington have simply ignored the law, despite the devastating effects that these areas can have on people like Malloy and their property.

"It's been a thorn in my side for 10 years," the retired mechanic said of the old factory beside his four-bedroom home in Abington. "I would have sold this place years ago, but I wouldn't get anything for it."

Malloy has had to endure the nightmare for so long because Continental Mattress declared bankruptcy and left behind a building with such profound hazards that the Massachusetts State Police filed a criminal complaint against the company's president last year.

Joseph T. Roth, the head of the bankrupt company, has failed to respond to the complaint about the safety hazards, including the lack of an operable sprinkler system and conditions that could lead to a fire.

"It's a public safety concern," says Abington Fire Chief Malcolm Whiting, who prompted the complaint after inspecting the property.

Roth neglected to appear in court on the appointed dates and now there's a warrant for his arrest. And despite orders from the state environmental agency, Roth has failed to clean up the toxic chemicals – a witch's brew of cadmium, lead and hazardous waste – sprinkled on the site, possibly leaching into the groundwater and destroying an area of wetlands.

Mardie Cummings is concerned about safety in her neighborhood because of the lack of action at the former mattress factory.

"I don't own that place anymore," Roth said in a short telephone interview from his New Jersey office. "It's in the hands of the bankruptcy trustee."

When asked whether he intends to address the hazards, Roth simply said: "This is not my site."

Then he hung up.

Continental Mattress may be an extreme case, but dozens of other sites on the South Shore remain polluted, too, abandoned by their owners and left to decay, like shipwrecks on the sea floor.

Falling through the cracks

Sixty sites on the South Shore, including the mattress company, fall into what the state DEP calls a "default" category. Often the polluters have skipped town, thumbed their nose at the law or have insufficient funds to clean up the toxins.

"These are sites that may have fallen through the cracks," says Millie Garcia-Surette, deputy regional director of the state agency's southeast regional office, which oversees toxic sites in 70 towns on the South Shore as well as Cape Cod and the Islands.

In Abington alone, the state environmental agency has records of nine so called "default" sites, where the owners have failed to clean up contamination according to the schedule or failed to follow other requirements of state law.

Weymouth and Abington each have more default sites than any other town on the South Shore, but they're not alone.

Braintree has eight default sites. Hingham, Marshfield and Rockland each have six, Cohasset has five and Holbrook, Kingston, Norwell, Pembroke each have three. Scituate and Hanover only have one apiece. (See chart)

But the numbers alone don't tell the whole story.

In Scituate, for instance, one of the default sites listed by the state agency at 108 Stockbridge Ave. is now used as the home base of several landscape companies and auto repair shops.

In sharp contrast with the owners of Continental Mattress, Theresa Nielson says she has been trying to clean up her property on Stockbridge Avenue, located in a residential neighborhood, ever since she bought it in 1985 from owners who neglected to tell her about the extent of the contamination.

"I got slammed with all the problems," Nielson says. "The neighbors accused me of polluting their water and killing their kids." At a cost of $25,000, she says she had three underground storage tanks removed, and excavated tons of soil from the 15-acre property.

By mistake, she says, she spread the contaminated soil across the property. Now an environmental contractor is regularly monitoring three test wells to gauge the contamination of an underground aquifer.

Nielson says her property may qualify to come off the state's list soon. But in contrast with major Superfund sites like those at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, state officials know little about such default sites.

"We're trying to get a handle on what kind of firestorms are out there," adds Garcia-Surette, who recently asked her staff to examine 385 default sites in the entire southeast region. Her office in Lakeville oversees 1,500 toxic sites and employs only 40 field personnel.

And some of the case files are so disorganized, the staff can't find them for a review, which was the case when the Mariner Newspapers asked to examine the toxic site listed by the agency at 535 Plain St. in Marshfield, even though it's listed as one of the worst sites in the state.

Neighbors suffer from neglect

The default sites may not all be "firestorms," but many pose a Catch 22 for state and local officials. With no one to hold accountable for the pollution, state officials often shelve the default cases, leaving clean up orders to languish in a library overflowing with hundreds of other active files.

And town officials are often fearful of the liability of condemning the properties and taking over the responsibility of their costly cleanups.

"We want to be very careful about whether the town wants to own the property," says Abington Town Treasurer Thomas Connolly, referring to the mattress factory. "We may be able to foreclose on the property and then auction it off. But we have to make sure we can either get it cleaned up or sell it."

As a result of the Catch 22, default sites simply go ignored and become orphans of the system.

A history of contamination

Neighbors often suffer the most from the neglect.

Mardie Cummings and her husband, John, live a few houses away from the Continental Mattress Company and the 12 acres of property it owns in Abington.

The elderly couple is not as vocal as Ted Malloy about the factory, but it disturbs the two of them, too.

"If the sheet metal on the roof ever flew off in a storm, it could be lethal," says Mrs. Cummings, who lived through a hurricane in 1938 and saw what it could do.

Nearly half a century ago, Mrs. Cummings worked in the factory, when the Bay State Ice Cream Co. owned the 98,000 square foot building. She sold ice cream and worked as a waitress in the company's small restaurant, which was open to the public.

After the ice cream factory went out of business in 1967, Perx Products Corporation took over the building and produced a non-dairy creamer there. Nearby residents were evacuated temporarily from the area after a release of ammonia from the plant threatened their health in July 1986.

Afterward, the state environmental agency cited Perx for the toxic chemical release. But things went from bad to worse.

> "We have observed the air filled with a red smoke and have become nauseous because of it."
> –Abington resident Clayton P. Stone

Three years later, another company, NESCO Inc. started to use a portion of the factory to grind mufflers and recover metal for resale. Thousands of mufflers were stored at the building, and as its employees shredded them, metal particles spread over the neighborhood.

"We have observed the air filled with a red smoke and have become nauseous because of it," Abington resident Clayton P. Stone wrote to the chairman of the board of selectmen in 1990.

When Abington patrolman David G. Majenski went to the factory to enforce a cease and desist order in March of 1990, the officer "observed a thick cloud of metal dust material emitting from the back of the building," his report says.

Majenski became sick to his stomach. Five minutes after leaving the area, he threw up and his nose started bleeding. Today, the deputy chief remembers the situation as "horrendous...It was really kind of pathetic, considering it was near residences."

In fact, the air pollution was so bad some people believe it probably killed a neighbor's cat. According to a vet's report, Mickey became sick and died from a diseased liver "possibly due to toxic ingestion." On May 17, 1990, the state environmental agency cited NESCO and ordered it to stop polluting the air.

That still didn't put an end to the toxic saga.

A legacy of toxins, back taxes

On the last day of 1991, JTR Equity Corp., which rented space to NESCO and was headed by Roth, sold the property for $1.9 million to Continental Mattress, another company with Roth at its helm and founded by him in 1976, according to real estate records and court documents.

Continental used the building for storage and shipping bedding to numerous customers, including Mattress Discounters, the well-known national chain. Continental's large trucks rumbling through the neighborhood ruffled some residents, but the noise wasn't as bad as the soot from the muffler shredders.

Continental intended to establish a manufacturing facility in Abington, but it lost two of its major customers including Mattress Discounters and, as a result, ceased operations 18 months after it began.

"A chain link fence may keep the kids out, but it doesn't stop the contamination from spreading into our yards."

– Ted Malloy

On June 8, 1995, the New Jersey-based Continental Mattress Company declared bankruptcy and surrendered its property in Abington to the Federal Depository Insurance Corporation, according to records filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court.

The FDIC sold the mortgage on the property to a company in Washington, D.C., but Roth apparently retains the deed to the property, according to real estate records filed in the Plymouth County Registry of Deeds.

The tangled history of the property's ownership has made it even more difficult to cleanup and to sell.

An eyesore with back taxes

"It's an eyesore," says Ann Knowles, a real estate agent who has keys to the site and has lined up prospective buyers who would like to demolish the building, remove the toxins and develop the site into a housing complex for the elderly.

During a recent tour of the building with Knowles, who says she's trying to sell the building on behalf of her client, Joseph Roth, a group of reporters and photographers got a first-hand look at the "eyesore."

Barrels of paint thinner, old mattresses, boat motors, political campaign signs and cardboard boxes litter the floor. A portion of the roof has caved in and some warehouse doors remain unlocked.

File cabinets filled with original documents containing the names of former employees stand in an office area, marked by a sign that says, "Wipe Your Feet." The area is devoid of life, however, except for weeds crawling under the doors and mildew growing on ceiling tiles.

Continental Mattress' owners not only abandoned two truck-loads of equipment that block access to the site, they left behind a tax debt to the town that now amounts to $263,987, according to the treasurer.

But perhaps the company's greatest legacy is the contamination left on its property. A 1992 study detected cadmium and lead in the groundwater below the site as well as petroleum hydrocarbons in soil samples.

One of the neighbors' children played in the area for a year and a test found lead at elevated levels in her blood, causing a wave of fear in the family.

Four years ago, the state environmental agency determined that the property posed "an imminent hazard condition" because contaminated soil was "readily accessible to neighborhood children." The agency ordered the company to fence off the contaminated area and gave it until May 24, 1999 to clean up the site.

Today a fence circles the patch of land next to the building but nothing else has been done. And as Malloy says: "A chain link fence may keep the kids out, but it doesn't stop the contamination from spreading into our yards."

Malloy has written his state representative and brought town officials' attention to the property so often, they've grown tired of his complaints. He wrote to Roth several times, pointing out the health hazard the building presents, but never got a response.

In response to his flurry of letters, State Rep. Kathleen M. Teahan, D-Whitman, responded by pointing out the complaints that Abington Fire Chief Whiting and the state police filed in court. But a review of the files shows those complaints produced no results whatsoever.

"It is time for the board and its members to take action," Malloy wrote in one letter to selectmen.

But he's growing weary of the battle. "It's almost like I'm beating my brains against a brick wall," he says.

Abington is at a loss about what to do with the 12 acres and the old factory. It stands as a silent testimonial to an environmental protection system that Malloy views as a failure.

But Garcia-Surette, the DEP's deputy director, says the agency may be able to tap a capital bond fund to clean up default sites like Continental Mattress once her staff finishes its study. The so called "non-responder initiative" may be Malloy's only hope.

Toxic Trouble

One of Malloy's neighbors, George Soper, foresees a tragedy at Continental Mattress that he says could be avoided. "Someone's going to have to get killed before the town does something about it," he says.

For her part, Malloy's daughter, Laura, says she's tried to prevent her three teenagers from playing in back of the house. "They've been robbed of their yard for years," she says.

But she says something more important has been stolen from her family.

"It's really sad. My father has worked all his life for this property. He's been beating his brains against a brick wall with no results. And when he's gone, this is all my father has to leave to me and his grandchildren."

Staff writers Julie Mehegan and DeAnna Putnam contributed to this story.

Superfund restores worst sites on South Shore

By Christopher A. Szechenyi and Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITERS

A tangle of tubes and pipes carry 200,000 gallons of groundwater a day through an elaborate filtration system to rehabilitate one of the worst toxic sites on the South Shore.

Then scientists test the water to make sure it no longer contains dioxin, arsenic or other potentially cancer-causing substances. Every day, a giant accordion-like press squeezes a ton of solid sludge from the water before trucks haul the leftover mud to a landfill in Belleville, Michigan.

The space-age plant in Holbrook operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week to restore one of the worst toxic waste sites not only on the South Shore but in the nation.

This is the legacy of the Baird & McGuire chemical plant.

So far, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has spent a total of $130 million in taxpayer money extracting toxins from the earth and water.

Baird & McGuire is just one of the major toxic waste sites on the South Shore that have been making news almost weekly. Others include:

• Eight federal Superfund sites that ring the 1,400-acre decommissioned South Weymouth Naval Air Station. The Navy has already spent $10 million testing the sites and partially cleaning them up. But they are expected to require much more decontamination to make way for senior citizen housing, public parks and a mega-mall with 200 stores slated to be built by the year 2002. Public hearings about the path of a new road to the development are scheduled to take place this month.

• A Rockland neighborhood is awaiting the results of a study by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, which may determine whether residents have suffered above average cancer rates that may be associated with pollution from the former Naval Air Station. A preliminary study already found slightly higher incidences of brain and central nervous system cancers.

• The National Fireworks Co. site next to Factory Pond in Hanover contains high levels of benzene, lead, mercury, nickel and chromium. A fireworks manufacturing company, an ammunition plant and a chemical research facility once occupied the 260-acre site, which may take another decade to clean up.

"It needs to be cleaned up. There's a lot of contamination here. If we don't treat it, the chemicals would contaminate the public water supply."
–Melissa Taylor, EPA's project manager

• The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is considering whether to assign the Weymouth Neck area as a Superfund site. A fertilizer plant there polluted the soil with lead, arsenic and other toxins. State Sen. Robert Hedlund, (R-Weymouth), wants the federal agency to take charge of the site. Joseph Iantosca, a local developer, would like to build high-rise condominiums on the site. But his plan is under attack by activists who claim he has failed to adequately address the contamination.

Baird & McGuire stands at the top of the class, once ranked the 14th most hazardous Superfund site in the country out of a total of 1,284. Some 35 of the Superfund sites reside in Massachusetts.

The cleanup of Baird & McGuire may continue for another 30 years at a cost of $3.5 million annually, a sharp contrast to what is spent by the state and federal government on so-called "default" sites, which have been abandoned or ignored.

Some sites make the federal Superfund list because they're so hazardous they can't be shrugged off.

For example, when Baird & McGuire ceased operations in 1983, the company left behind lagoons and cesspools filled with a toxic brew. But worse than that, more than 100 potentially deadly chemicals had leached into the groundwater below the property.

"It needs to be cleaned up," says Melissa Taylor, the EPA's project manager, during a tour of the plant. "There's a lot of contamination here. If we don't treat it, the chemicals would contaminate the public water supply."

The agency and its contractors have already excavated 248,000 tons of contaminated soil – the equivalent of a six-story building filled with dirt – and incinerated it at a cost of $106 million.

Once the soil was decontaminated, it was spread back on the ground around the former Baird & McGuire plant.

The Herculean incineration effort was only part of the job.

Today the treatment facility — built in 1992 at a cost of $15 million — cleanses water sucked out of the ground from seven wells. The water laced with benzene, arsenic and other toxins then travels through a series of filters and chemical decontamination steps.

By the end of the elaborate process, "it meets drinking water standards," says Chris Zevitas of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which is managing the plant.

In the final step, the purified water is sent back into the ground. Then the groundwater is extracted again and again to repeat the cleansing process.

By the end of the elaborate water treatment process, "it meets drinking water standards."

– Chris Zevitas of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which is managing the plant.

The EPA began the water treatment in 1993, and now some officials of the Tri-Town Water Board would like to tap the Cochato River, which runs past the Baird & McGuire site, as a source of drinking water for Holbrook, Randolph and Braintree.

The idea has met resistance from some residents, including Holbrook Selectman Susan Montgomery Wright, who thinks the river may still be contaminated by Baird & McGuire. Pregnant women and children are prohibited from eating fish from the Cochato, she points out.

"We don't want the river used as drinking water," she says sternly.

Last year, the EPA found some evidence the contaminated groundwater beneath Baird & McGuire was affecting the sediment at the bottom of the Cochato River, the EPA's Taylor says. But the agency hasn't taken any position on using the river as a drinking water source. That subject is scheduled for upcoming meetings.

Whatever the outcome of that debate one thing's certain: The EPA and its contractors spare no expense in the clean up of the Baird & McGuire site.

Inside the plant's laboratory, two new mass spectrometers that cost $60,000 each test the treated water, and in a room next door, another $30,000 machine performs gas chromatography on the samples.

The federal agency is so strict and precise about the elaborate undertaking it dictates everything down to what kind of water collection bottle can be used for the test samples.

"The general public believes the site has been cleaned up," says Bill Miles, a community activist who is a constant critic of the EPA's activities in Holbrook. "But it's not."

Taylor says it may take three decades to completely clean up the site, but nobody knows for sure. At $3.5 million a year to operate the treatment plant, that would cost another $100 million on top of the $130 million already spent.

The total tab of the cleanup could exceed $200 million.

According to authorities, Baird &McGuire went bankrupt and contributed less than $1 million toward the cleanup.

Despite its bankruptcy, the company still owes Holbrook $156,924 in back taxes.

When asked about the plant, Cameron Baird of Scituate, one of the company's owners who receives the tax notices at his home at 445 Tilden Road, simply said: "I'm sorry I can't help you."

Then he hung up — dodging questions about a factory that leaves behind one of the worst environmental legacies in U.S. history.

COHASSET SPORTS

Football squad looks to contend for SSL crown

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The reality of the Cohasset High football team's prospects for the 1999 season came to light after the Skippers' long-awaited victory over the rival Hull High team last Thanksgiving.

The win capped a rebirth season for Cohasset under head coach Tony Rolfe as the Skippers finished with a promising 5-5 record that breathed life back into the football program.

Questions surround the Skippers this season, due more to to whom they have lost than the players on the roster.

Cohasset will have its hands full this fall after graduating 14 seniors, "all players" in Rolfe's eyes. The Skippers will head into this season with a team chock-full of sophomores who should see plenty of playing time in what looks to be a tough South Shore League schedule.

Rolfe, though, likes the progress the young Cohasset team has made during the preseason and plans to make several adjustments leading into the Skippers' season opener, Sept. 17 at home against Mashpee.

"We knew last year what was going to happen and what the situation was," said Rolfe. "Every day we're hoping to get a little better."

Cohasset's opponents should have their hands full catching up to the speedy backfield tandem of running backs Dan Trowers and Brian Krupczak. Both starred on the Skippers' track team last spring and that speed should translate nicely on the football field when they hit the holes that, hopefully, the offensive line can open for them.

"We do have good team speed," Rolfe said. "Speed is one of our assets."

Much of that responsibility will rely on the play of veteran offensive tackles Craig Parker and Craig Davis. The pair has played impressively in the Skippers' three preseason scrimmages and are only expected to get stronger with every down.

Davis and Parker will also be the two players opposing coaches will focus on when Cohasset's defense is

Cohasset workers riding from Boston to NY for a cause

By Lauryn Mittleman
CORRESPONDENT

Imagine preparing for a trip to New York City—deciding where to stay, what to pack and how to get there. Let's see, you could fly, take the train, board a bus or drive yourself. Or, how about riding a bicycle?

Erin Delaney

Of course you'd have to pack light, and rain would be a real nuisance, but sometimes sacrifices must be made. Particularly if it's for the benefit of others.

On September 16, as part of A.I.D.S. Ride '99, Scituate residents Laura Buchanan and Erin Delaney will do just that, setting out on a three-day cycling tour from Boston to the Big Apple. Throughout the weekend they will journey along side 3500 fellow riders, covering 275 miles of terrain, to raise what is hoped to be over $3,000 for the cause.

The annual event, one of five national AIDS Rides held each year, marks the second year of participation for rider Buchanan. Last year at this time the athlete took to the road raising $1,500, and doing so has inspired her to climb back in the seat.

But then there's more to the story. While one would assume all this pedaling power would have to come from a seasoned cyclist, in truth Buchanan still considers herself a newcomer to the sport. For merely three short years the thirty-four-year-old cycled strictly for hobby's sake, before only recently deciding to seriously train.

"I said to myself, 'why not train toward something?,'" explains Buchanan as she readies herself for the upcoming challenge. "I wanted to ride for a cause, for more than just myself."

Last year, as a participant of AIDS Ride '98, the athlete cycled solo for what she describes as a "personal cause." However, this time around she will have both riding partner and tent-mate in friend and co-worker Erin Delaney.

Laura Buchanan

Surprising but true, amateur cyclist Delaney has only been pedaling the pavement since March of this year. Riding mountain bikes "off-road" for some time prior, it was her fellow worker at ABB Optical of Cohasset who encouraged her to hit the street.

Before long Buchanan was tempting Delaney to give longer rides a go, and Delaney's first ever real ride for distance was completed this summer when the pair toured for two days on a crusade to battle Diabetes. That race spanned from Boston to Provincetown.

"I was a little nervous beforehand," admits Delaney in retrospect. "I didn't know what to expect.

"It's true, at first you never know what your body can or will do," agrees Buchanan.

But then, a few dozen miles over her shoulder, Delaney says she found herself realizing, 'Hey, I can do this.'"

And if she could do it for one day, why not three? No sooner had their wheels cooled,

"The A.I.D.S. Ride is coming up soon," Buchanan was whispering in her co-worker's ear.

"Are you nuts, another so soon?" replied Delaney.

But good sport Delaney "just kept adding more miles," and before long the commitment was made to a steady training diet of 80 miles daily.

"For me this has become a personal challenge," says Delaney today. "So far my family's been impressed. 'She can really ride a bike!,' they've started to say."

Fellow rider Buchanan says those close to her have also been supportive of her charitable endeavors, substituting contributions in lieu of Christmas presents and sending care packages of supplies like extra socks before rides.

Similarly, for A.I.D.S. Ride '99, friends, family and co-workers have also been generous. However, as the ride draws near, the two women say they still have a ways to go on their sponsor sheets. To cover the entree fee of the ride, a minimum of $1,700 must be raised by each rider. Thus far the two team-mates have barely reached the half way point.

"We haven't quite gotten the feedback we expected," said Delaney last week. "But we're getting there."

Soliciting donations isn't always the most comfortable situation, the two explain, and any and all contributions are sincerely appreciated. They remind pledges are tax deductible, with all moneys raised directly benefiting the cause.

Currently making last minute adjustments to their equipment, today the pair are mentally preparing and making wishes for sunny skies. Ideal biking weather, for those uninformed, consists of mid-seventies temperatures with (rather obviously) the wind at one's back. Last year's Ride weather was perfect, re-on the field. With Parker holding down a defensive tackle spot and Davis expected to put on a strong pursuit from his end position, the Skippers have two veterans offensive linemen must contain if they hope to put points on the board.

The starting quarterback job looks to be one of the most stable on the team with sophomore Jason Brown barking the count. Brown has impressed Rolfe, particularly with his composure and poise in leading the offense.

"I'm pleased with what he's doing," Rolfe said. "We've had three scrimmages and he has gotten better with every one."

Blessed with a strong passing arm and the ability to move well when forced out of the pocket, Brown is "not intimidated by the job." What he lacks in overall experience Brown more than makes up for in confidence. Mentally, Brown is tough and doesn't get rattled by opposing defenses.

"Nothing seems to bother him," Rolfe said.

As impressed as Rolfe is with the progress the Skippers have, so far, made in the preseason, he plans to continue moving players around and "tuning" the team before facing Mashpee.

It's no surprise he considers defending two-time Super Bowl champs Norwell High to be the SSL favorite, along with what is shaping up to be a very strong Carver High team. Hanover and Abington should also figure into the mix. Then there's long-time rival, Hull, which opens its season this evening.

Rolfe isn't envious of Hull High coach John Anderson, whose Pirate team opens this evening. The Skippers, instead, have a week of invaluable practice time the coach of any young football team would embrace in early September.

Rolfe gets another look at his team in action tonight in the SSL Jamboree. The annual exhibition kicks off at 5 p.m. at Cohasset and gives the Skippers the chance to play in front of a crowd for the first time this season. Cohasset is scheduled to play one half against John Sullivan's Hanover team and Jim Kelliher's Abington High squad.

Rolfe expects to see a different Cohasset team in November, compared to the September product.

"By the end of the season," Rolfe said, "I see us having improved a great deal."

ports Buchanan, and this year the pair are packing their sun-screen and praying for the same.

The two speed-compatible riders also report they plan to ride side by side, taking care of their bodies with plenty of stops en route. They will pile up on Power Bars and carbohydrates, with plenty of sports drinks to wash them down.

And while some cyclists do consider A.I.D.S. Ride a race, these two say they plan to cruise at their own pace, taking in the landscape from over their handle-bars. Much of the route traverses scenic country roads, that is before leading to not so scenic areas of New York boroughs like The Bronx.

But through it the riders are never alone.

"All along the way people come out and cheer and hold signs of encouragement," explains Buchanan. "The people of Connecticut were unbelievable last year."

The added boosts of morale makes mounting lonely hills a little less tiresome, but still,

"By the end of the day you are physically exhausted," says Buchanan from experience. "But somehow the adrenaline kicks in."

Additionally joining the pack in their adventure, biking enthusiasts not riding but rather serving as tech and support crew. There will be medical units, motorcyclists curtailing traffic, and a whole entourage of volunteers to assist in the feeding and sheltering of riders. Each evening A.I.D.S. Riders will set up camp in designated road-side sites, their tents and meals provided by the Ride's sponsoring agencies.

Each evening, exhausted but somehow energized, the riders will be briefed as to the day's events, and shown videotape from the road. There is also entertainment at "tent city," along with quiet time to talk with fellow courageous riders bound by the same cause.

"There's a great feeling of togetherness," Buchanan offers. "For those few days we are all like one big family. Some riders are older, some are handicapped . . . They come from all over the country, and from all walks of life."

Some riders are HIV positive, while others ride in memory of lost loved ones. Many display photographs beside their ride numbers on T-shirts and helmets.

"I think nowadays you're hearing more and more of people personally affected [by the epidemic]," offers Delaney. "I think going into the new millennium everyone will be touched by it."

Attitudes regarding the non-discriminatory disease are changing, the two believe, and with the stigma lifting the focus is now on finding a cure.

For Buchanan and Delaney personally, the focus is now mainly on physical preparation. Last weekend the pair set out for what they describe as a "light day ride"—80 miles commencing in Chelmsford, where they were joined by other A.I.D.S. Riders from Massachusetts.

Finally, newcomer to the pack Delaney says she's thankful she has someone to answer questions about such matters as sleeping in fields and using portable showers. But still Delaney admits she's feeling just a bit leery regarding certain matters. Her greatest apprehension? Braving Boston at rush hour. The massive rush departs at daybreak from Northeastern University, immediately following opening ceremonies.

Then, a long seventy-two hours later (give or take), Madison Square Garden will host the race's finish line and closing ceremonies. There each rider will peddle just a little bit further to take their "victory lap," before hoisting their bicycle above head for a souvenir photo.

"I think I'm most looking forward to the victory ride at the end," says Delaney today. "To knowing I did well, that I made it, and that it was all for a good cause."

"What I'm looking forward to is the opening ceremonies," adds Buchanan. "Last year they were just incredible. I had no idea what to expect going into the ride, but after five minutes of listening to the music and speakers it all hit me."

Should you wish to sponsor these two riders, donations can be sent to the attention of Erin Delaney at ABB Optical, 1 Pleasant Street Cohasset, Ma. 02025.

Cohasset Little League tryouts for '00 major league season announced

The Cohasset Youth Baseball Association (CYBA) has announced that on Saturday, Sept. 18, at 2 p.m. at Barnes Field on North Main Street, the tryouts for the 2000 major league season will be conducted.

Youngsters who will be either 10, 11 or 12 years old on or before July 31, 2000 and are not currently playing at the major league level, are invited and encouraged to participate in this once-a-year tryout event.

Each participant will be asked to perform a series of five 'basic baseball skill tasks', that include hitting, running, throwing/pitching as well as fielding fly and ground balls. Everyone will be scored on a 1-5 point basis in each of the noted areas of performance.

Three coaches representing each of the existing six major league teams (18 total) will perform the evaluation exercise. Each of the major league teams three scores will be consolidated with the other five teams average score in order to obtain a participants 'total' score.

The quantity of departing 1999 12 year olds, plus relocation and other circumstances will be the basis for determining the abundance of opening in the major league for this upcoming 2000 season.

Shortly after the conclusion of the tryout program, CYBA managers and coaches will meet to select those ballplayers who, by virtue of their attained score, complemented by the quantity of league openings, are eligible to be 'drafted'.

These tryouts are only for 10, 11 and 12 year olds who conform to the Little League age requirements and birth year (Aug. 1-July 31). All those who are eligible should plan to attend, as this is the only opportunity to tryout.

Applications are available at Town Hall or can be completed upon arrival at Barnes Field. Participants are requested to arrive at 1:30 to facilitate the registration process.

There is no money required for this exercise but each participant should bring a baseball glove, hat and long pants. Rubber 'cleated' footwear is optional. No other 'attire/equipment' is required.

All candidates will receive notification from the CYBA within 5 days following the tryouts. Parents are welcome to watch this event which generally is expected to last approximately 90 minutes (3:30 p.m.). Rain date is Sunday Sept. 19 at 2:p.m.

Any questions regarding these tryouts may be forwarded to Dan Leahy (383-1005), Mark DeGiacomo (383-6413) or Bob Morgan (383-3265).

One man's trash...

Treasures are often found at the 'boutique'

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

For every pack rat who shudders at the thought of parting with her treasured Apple II E computer, there is a person who despises clutter and throws away the dining room table when she buys a new one.

Both types of people can satisfy those urges at the take- it or leave- it section at the Cohasset Transfer Station, otherwise known as the "boutique." Located in the Boy Scout building, the boutique is open from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. on Wednesday and again from Friday through Sunday.

Those who can't wait to get rid of their junk will find others who come in hope of finding rare treasures.

"A lot of stuff comes in here that is worth keeping," said Arthur Lehr, chairman of the recycling committee. "People leave everything and anything. I've seen toys, books, silverware, skis, bicycles. Someone is always bringing something wonderful."

Selectman Merle Brown said he has often found things at the boutique that were worth keeping.

"I've found chairs that were practically brand-new," he said. "Someone just didn't like them. I've gotten a microwave there and I know people find a lot of rugs."

Cohasset Historical Society president John Hovorka said his first encounter with the town's history came as a result of a book which he found at the boutique.

"About a month after I moved here in 1994, I found Bigelow's History of Cohasset there," he said. "The book was written in 1898 and reprinted in the 1970's. I got one of the reprints."

"I must have learned something because now I'm president of the Historical Society," he laughed.

Lehr has seen people make all sorts of finds at the boutique.

"One fella claimed he got a silver tray and hocked it in Quincy for $300," he said. "We don't generally support that kind of thing, but it shows the kinds of things that show up sometimes. I know a lot of people who have found antique chairs. They might have a rung broken, but if you get them fixed up a little, they're as good as new."

Clothes are not among the items that people are to leave at the boutique because groups such as the Salvation Army collect them for charitable purposes. Other items which should not be left are propane tanks and mattresses.

"For the bigger items, such as overstuffed chairs, people are charged," Lehr said. "We have two employees there full-time to check on proper compliance."

Lehr said that most people adhere to the regulations and treat the "boutique" respectfully. He has, however, seen arguments break out when two people covet the same object.

"Occasionally, two people will see the same thing at pretty much the same time," he said. "We've never had anybody come to blows but we've definitely had a couple of screaming matches."

Anger is not the sole emotion that Lehr has seen displayed in respect to the boutique.

"It's really a study in human nature," he said. "Some people appear really guilty when they're looking through stuff. They'll peer up to see if anyone's watching them. I've seen some families where the husband will load up the van and drive off and the wife will come and bring everything right back."

Thrift-minded recycling committee member John McNabb inspects a freshly deposited IBM PC at the "Boutique."

Hovorka said the boutique does a wonderful job of teaching children the value of recycling.

"I see little kids there getting toys all the time," he said. "It's great training for them in the ideas of reuse and conservation."

Lehr said that the boutique has made coming to the transfer station a more enjoyable experience for young and old alike.

"The youngsters really make a beeline for it and I think it has lowered the distaste that a lot of people had for coming to the transfer station," he said. "I've seen people who didn't want to come here leave with some beautiful light fixtures and vanities."

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

A JOB FOR A PROFESSIONAL

While it may seem like a simple task, many homeowners are bewildered by the many choices involved in selecting the fabric and style for a window treatment. Some people settle for neutrals because they are not ready to commit to a stronger color. Others may not be completely sure which style will work best for their particular situations. When such questions arise, it's time to call in a professional who has faced all manner of circumstances and has overcome all types of problems. In addition, professionals can help clarify the decision-making process with their ability to understand color, combine patterns and deal with fabric. They are also likely to be a wellspring of imaginative solutions and ideas.

Decorating a home or office can be an exciting and rewarding process. However, few people have the time or expertise to complete such a task. THE DESIGNING WOMAN respects your time and is dedicated to providing you with sound recommendations and hands-on assistance to create rooms of distinction. Often, we can improve the look and feel of any environment by working with your existing furniture and accessories. Call us at 383-6411 to learn more about our services or to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: A professional designer can save consumers money by avoiding costly mistakes involving fabric selection and measurements.

IT'S HAPPENING

Registration for ASP 2000, Sept. 19

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project will hold an informational meeting for its 13th work camp experience. The meeting will take place on Sunday, Sept. 19, 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church. There will be a slide show from last year's journey by our 138 volunteers to five counties in West Virginia. Parents and alumni are welcome to come and see the show.

Registration forms and schedules will be distributed and explained. Do note—this is a year-long commitment of fundraising and preparation. The dates for the 2000 trip are tentatively set for June 24 to July 2. Deadline for returning the forms and nonrefundable $50 deposit is Oct. 15. The trip is open to anyone in 10th grade or older and any interested adults.

Sunday concerts at St. Stephen' s

The 1999-2000 Sunday concert series at St. Stephen's Church begins on Sept. 26, at 3:p.m. The church celebrates the feast of St. Michael and All Angels with a performance of J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 130 which was written for the feast of St. Michael.

Rendering this noble work will be the Cantate Domino Chorale, a chorale group consisting of Boston area singers, conducted by Fredrick Guzasky, director of music at St. Stephen's, and accompanied by John Whiteside, director of music at St. Michael's in Milton. In addition to the Bach, organ and choral works presented will include those of Hassler, Tye, and yet others including elements of audience participation.

A free-will offering will be taken.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicap accessible, and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For information call (781) 383-1083.

Autumn open house at art center

An afternoon of artist demonstrations, presentations, music and refreshments will highlight the South Shore Art Center's Fall Open House, Sunday, Sept. 12 from 2 to 4 p.m. Visitors will have a chance to talk with instructors about upcoming courses and workshops, learn about special programs and visit the current exhibition: The Other Side: Recent Work by South Shore Art Center Faculty.

The exhibition will feature the work of 46 artists who are faculty members of the art center. Artists will demonstrate painting, watercolor, paper pulp, rubber stamping, drawing, clay and ceramics. Classes in all of these areas are included in the art center's fall course offerings.

Art supplies will be available and a special, one-day 10 percent discount will apply to all course registrations. Call 781-383-ARTS (2787) for more information or to register for courses and workshops.

a. 12 tons
b. 24 tons
c. 60 tons
d. 120 tons

2. Let's say your vehicle is due for an Enhanced Emissions & Safety Test. When is the best time to go?

a. Any Tuesday around 1:17 a.m.
b. The last week of the month like everyone else
c. Let me check with the Psychic Friends Connection
d. Early to mid-month

3. What happens to air pollution when it rains?

a. It gets wet
b. It comes back to earth and seeps into the soil
c. It comes back to earth and runs off into lakes, streams and other bodies of water
d. b and c

4. While the safety portion of the Enhanced Emissions & Safety Test is conducted every year, how often do you have to get a biennial emissions test?

a. Every other year
b. Whenever you get a hankering
c. The second Tuesday in November
d. Every month that has an "R" in its name

5. What is the one thing you can do to make sure you pass the Enhanced Emissions & Safety Test?

a. Keep your vehicle properly maintained
b. Fill the gas tank with warm soapy water
c. Sell your car for scrap metal and buy a new one
d. Make sure your car gets a good night's sleep

d. All Massachusetts residents

ENHANCED EMISSIONS & SAFETY TEST
Coming in October

If you want to know about the upcoming enhanced emissions test, take this simple quiz.

To locate a licensed testing station, or for more information, call toll-free, 1-877-387-8234 or visit http://vehicletest.state.ma.us.

ANSWERS: 1.d. Air pollution will be decreased by 120 tons a day. States with similar emissions testing have seen a 25% decrease in air pollution from vehicles. 2.d. To avoid waiting in line, don't wait until the end of the month to have your vehicle tested. 3.d When it rains, air pollution returns to earth to become soil and water pollution. 4.a. Because the new emisstions test is better and more comprehensive, you only have to take the test every other year. The safety test, however, is still required annually. 5.a. Keep your car properly cared for and the test should be a snap. 6.d No one in the Commonwealth benefits from air pollution, and it's toughest on our children, the elderly and those who work outdoors.

LIBRARY CORNER

Library reception

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library staff, Library Trustees and Friends of the Library invite friends, family and the public to a reception on Sunday, Oct. 3 from 5 - 7 p.m. honoring former employee Nancy Knight who died this past February.

Mrs. Knight was a devoted employee of the library who served for more than 30 years as magazine organizer and book processor.

A bronze plaque honoring Mrs. Knight will be unveiled at the reception and refreshments will be served. All Cohasset residents are invited.

Artist of the Month

Judith Mehring, Hingham Landscape oil painter, is the current artist at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for the months of September and October.

Mehring graduated from Indiana University in art history and studio art courses then studied all over the world with workshops on the Cape with Steve Allrich; North Michigan with Charles Movalli and in France with Elinor Stewart and Gordon Faulkner.

Mehring began her painting career in watercolors but has been painting primarily in oil for the past nine years. She has exhibited at the South Shore Art Center & Arts Around Boston and has had one-man shows at Bank Boston and Shawmut Bank.

For the last five years, Mehring has exhibited in the Boston and Cape Cod areas as well as Michigan and Germany. Her paintings have won many prizes, several firsts, and recently the Sunrise Prize at the South Shore Art Association's spring festival. Her work is collected in Europe and the U.S.

"Nothing is more beautiful than the balance of color, light and shape found in the natural world around us from which I draw my subject matter," says Mehring. Come in and enjoy these beautifully executed and framed oil paintings from now until Nov. 3.

Website update

Thanks to Cohasset resident, Paul Park who operates his business Ideal World Inc. Com in Hingham, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library will have a Website Page up and running by next week.

Park answered a request in the Mariner's Library Corner column for someone to volunteer time to create a Website for the library. The Website will provide information about all the programs offered at the library and progress about the new library construction.

Hats off to Mr. Park for his support and look for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Website address within the next couple of weeks.

The library is still seeking an individual to donate time giving an informal three-session course or a "one-time" session teaching basic Internet techniques. The training would help all those who might be interested in using the three media workstations currently in use at the library.

Title 5 trail may lead to the courthouse

Mendel Road is running out of options

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Back in 1995 the Brennans chose to live in Cohasset. They were returning to the area after 3-1/2 years in the United Kingdom and found their dream home atop Mendel Road.

"We were attracted to this place because it almost looks Tudor," Pam Brennan recalled about the stone home, which once served as the carriage house of an old Cohasset estate.

At the time the move into their new home was delayed until the existing septic system built in 1991 was repaired to meet Title 5 regulations and given the OK from the board of health.

A copy of the Title 5 certificate is still in a folder among their other important house papers. Title 5 is the state environmental code regulating septic systems.

Title 5 certificates usually provide new homeowners with a level of comfort that their septic system will work properly.

But just two years later the Brennans' world and that of their four neighbors, who live in the other converted buildings that make up Olde Farm Hills Estate condominiums and share a joint septic system, was turned upside down. Paul Roberts, 1 Mendel Road, put his house on the market in February 1998 triggering another Title 5 inspection. The septic system failed.

"So here we are, a ton of research and a ton of money later," said an

Four new firefighters proposed

They would also be trained paramedics

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

If selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad get their way, Cohasset will benefit from first-rate emergency service, ensuring that paramedic care will reach residents more quickly during those perilous minutes between life and death.

Acting on a concern for both the safety of Cohasset residents and a need to solve the problem of soaring overtime in the fire department, selectmen voted Monday to propose hiring four new firefighter/paramedics. The $99,882 initiative for the second half of fiscal year [FY] 2000 will be presented for the approval of the Special Town Meeting on Dec. 6.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said having four additional firefighter/paramedics would be the final answer to the ongoing problem of overtime.

"Hiring four people as paramedics would fulfill a long-term goal of establishing paramedic service and it would reverse the action taken in 1995, when four firefighters were eliminated," he said. "That decision is the reason for the overtime problem we have today and the new firefighters would solve this problem."

"We won't eliminate overtime with six-firefighter crews but we will cut down on it dramatically," Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen. "Captain [Robert] Silvia

Boston Conservatory coming to Cohasset

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

One of the joys of living in a major city is the access to cultural opportunities that simply do not exist in the suburbs. Though you may sit for an hour in Massachusetts Avenue traffic trying to get to the symphony, there just isn't a substitute for the Boston Pops. If you want to see a first-rate musical, your destination is the Wang Center.

Boston is also home to some of the finest music schools in New England, one of which is the Boston Conservatory. Founded in 1867 and located in the Back Bay, the Boston Conservatory has a time-honored tradition of accomplished instructors.

One such instructor is Dr. G. Frederick Guzasky, who teaches piano and organ at the conservatory and is Procession approved for Brig St. John ceremony

Town Manager Mark Haddad approved a request last week for a procession from St. Anthony's church to the site of the Celtic Cross in Cohasset Central Cemetery on Oct. 10 as part of the ceremonies to remember the 150th anniversary of the Brig St. John shipwreck.

The commemoration will begin with a Mass celebrated by Bernard Cardinal Law at St. Anthony's. The procession will proceed along the common to the Central Cemetery and the event will be open to one and all.

Cunningham Bridge parking to be studied

Norfolk County surveyors will study the property lines near Cunningham Bridge to see how far the town land extends past the road. Selectmen are considering putting two legal parking spaces there and would like to see if the spaces could be pushed further from the road.

The traffic study committee did not recommend the spaces because of danger from the sharp curve and the fact that the land is at an angle.

Selectmen were divided on the issue.

"If we vote for spaces, it's the responsibility of the town if something goes wrong," said selectman Merle Brown.

"How many accidents have there been over they years there?" asked selectman Ronnie McMorris. "The intention in having the traffic study committee look at it was to allow access to that resource. I'd like to see the board take this up again."

Public hearing on parking ticket hikes

A public hearing is scheduled for the Sept. 28 selectmen's meeting, at which time residents will be able to voice their concerns regarding parking ticket increases.

Selectmen have discussed raising most parking fines from $15 to $25 and handicapped parking fines from $25 to $100. Parking tickets at Sandy Beach have already been increased to $25.

If citizens want their voices heard on the matter, their attendance at the public hearing is imperative. Parking ticket increases do not have to go before Town Meeting because of a vote taken at a Special Town Meeting on Oct. 28, 1996, which allows selectmen to raise the parking fines in town by a simple majority of the board's members.

New teen center is nearing completion

Inmates working on the project for next two weeks

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

During the next couple weeks, the old DPW garage in the town parking lot is being transformed into the new teen center. The construction crew doing the work is led by a foreman who is a master carpenter. Nothing out of the ordinary there. This is no average construction crew, however, and no ordinary foreman is supervising their work.

The workers are inmates at the minimum-security alternative center in Dedham, and the foreman is a captain in the Dedham police department. They are working on the teen center as part of the Community Service Program, which was started by the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office in 1985 as a way to serve the community while helping inmates make the adjustment from prison life to society.

"The Community Service Program is one of the most successful and visible components of the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office," said Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti, who demonstrated the lack of danger presented by the inmates by bringing his four year-old daughter Colleen along for a site visit. "Inmates give something back to society and learn the importance of becoming productive members of the community. The towns and non-profit organizations also benefit because work that might not have been done is completed."

The Norfolk County program was the first of its kind in the state and is the model for similar programs in eight other Massachusetts counties. Since its creation 14 years ago by former Sheriff Clifford Marshall, inmates have completed more than 450,000 hours of community service and have saved taxpayers almost $4.5 million.

The teen center is a prime example of a project that would have been difficult to complete without the work of the inmates. They will be doing general carpentry work such as working on the handicapped ramp, shed, floors, and framing. On Tuesday, they were doing the framing for what will be the bathrooms. Contracting out these tasks would have been an expensive proposition. With the lack of available town money to hire contractors, finishing the project would have proven difficult.

Towns and non-profit organizations participating in the program need only to supply the materials needed to complete the projects. The inmate work crew, supervised by a corrections officer, provide all of the labor.

"The work of the prisoners is going to help us tremendously," said Joe McElroy, 59 Windy Hill Road, who has worked to raise money to complete the teen center. "We figure we're going to save $10,000 on labor costs and that's money that we can put to other uses."

While she is not an official member of the Youth Resources Committee, which is comprised of adults and teens united in their quest to give Cohasset teenagers a place to go, Jodi Butman, 17 Spring St, has also lent considerable effort to making the teen center a reality. She said finding contractors who would donate their services was nearly an impossible task.

"The economy is so good right now that it's hard to get contractors," she said. "We are so excited about the work that the inmates are doing."

Bill Chaisson, community services supervisor for the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office, said the program enables towns to complete programs that have a difficult time getting town funding.

"A lot of these projects aren't the top priority for the towns," he said. "But people have learned about the program through word of mouth and now we have a waiting list."

There are 10 crews of inmates which work on a variety of projects throughout Norfolk County. The crew at the teen center is comprised of five inmates and Captain Dan Ferrara, whose background in carpentry allows him to pass on those skills to the inmates.

The inmates who are selected to participate in the Community Service Program must pass a screening by the Sheriff's Office classification staff and be interviewed by the program directors. Only inmates living in the minimum-security Braintree and Dedham alternative centers are eligible for the program. No inmates incarcerated in the medium-security Dedham correctional center participate in the program and inmates convicted of sex offenses are also ineligible.

"The key to the program is identifying the appropriate inmates," Bellotti said. "Our classification staff and program directors do an outstanding job at choosing them and that has enabled the program to be successful."

Those inmates chosen for the program are determined to be relatively low security risks.

"The inmates have to graduate through different levels of classification, with one being the highest risk and four being the lowest risk," said Chaisson. "All of these guys are 3.5's and 4's. Most of them are close to getting out."

One such inmate is Ricky Salabarria, whose sentence ends on Friday. He is spending his last days as an inmate working on the teen center project and said he is glad those days will be spent working on a project to benefit teenagers.

"This will give the kids a place to go in the winter and keep them busy," said Salabarria, who is originally from Milton and hopes to return to the carpenter's union when he gets out. "I enjoy doing things for kids so I don't mind the work at all."

Salabarria has been serving an 18-month sentence, and said he has been involved in the Community Service Program for "a few months." He began his sentence in the Dedham correctional center and later was transferred to the Dedham alternative center as he was re-classified.

"I voluntarily did peer education for AIDS awareness as well as educational programs for parenting and substance abuse," he said. "I got into the alternative center through good behavior and then got into this program. I enjoy it and I know it will help me to get reintegrated into society."

PHOTOS/KAREN QUINCY LOBERG

Norfolk County inmate Ricky Salabarria works on a window casing at "The Garage," which will soon house the new teen center.

Fellow inmate Ed MacPhail agreed that the program will help him to adjust to life when he gets out of the alternative center.

"The program gets you out and keeps you in the mode for work when you get back on the street," he said.

Salabarria's background in carpentry is not unusual for the inmates in the program. Many inmates come into the program having worked in a trade and they learn additional skills from the program's supervisors.

"When the inmates are interviewed, we ask them about their skills," said Chris Bell, director of community reintegration for the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office. "Many of them already come in with skills and we're able to teach them additional skills. Those are the reasons why the quality of the work is so good."

That quality can be seen in some of the other projects which Norfolk County inmates have completed during their 6,400 hours of work in Cohasset. Those jobs have included work at Town Hall, the Lightkeepers' Residence, and the elderly housing at 60 Elm St.

Sheriff Bellotti said he hopes that the teen center project is one of many which will have a profoundly beneficial effect in Norfolk County towns.

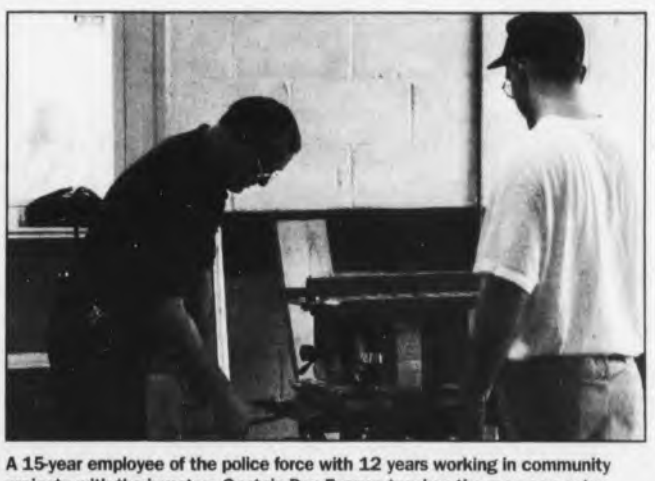
"I'd like to create a more prioritized list of projects," he said. "We don't mind doing painting and cleanup work, but we'd like to do more projects that will benefit at-risk kids and really help out the communities. I would like to invite town officials to let us know about projects which more closely fit our mission."

Bellotti said that projects are chosen for the program on a first-come, first-serve basis.

"Some projects are more extensive than others," he said. "The teen center is a fairly extensive project but we are able to handle it because of our project supervisors. It's important to make the towns aware of our capabilities and let them know we can do these types of projects."

This story is the first in a series on the teen center to encourage support for this important town project.

L-R, inmates Dan Flynn and Ed MacPhail cut two-by-fours, skills that they have acquired through the Community Re-integration Program run by the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office.



A 15-year employee of the police force with 12 years working in community projects with the inmates, Captain Dan Ferrara teaches the men carpentry skills. Pictured with Ferrara is Dan Flynn.

How you can help

The teen center project is in need of the following:

- Cash donations for its operating budget
- Television set
- Furniture
- VCR
- Nintendo games
- Stereo system

Title 5 trail may lead to the courthouse

angry but determined Mark Brennan in an interview at his home on Sunday.

For the past 18 months, the neighbors have pursued a frustrating trail that eventually led to the sewer commission where they begged to be allowed to connect to the expanded Central Cohasset Sewer District which is only a stone's throw away.

Their journey included installing an expensive "French drain" to divert groundwater from their existing septic system and having a new "mega-system" designed — that would require a 12-foot high, 150-foot perimeter retaining wall and an enormous amount of fill. The prognosis for success of the new system was poor.

"You worry if the next time out it fails, then what do you do?" asked Mark Brennan about installing a new septic system.

Paul Jenner of Paul G. Jenner Associates, the environmental consultant that inspected and subsequently failed the Mendel Road system in 1998, said the homeowners are rightfully concerned.

Not only was the system engineered badly but it should never have been put in there, Jenner said.

"When I did the inspection it was obvious the system had been in failure for a long time and it was only two years old," he said. "It failed hydraulically not long after it was put in.

"To be honest, I'd be very concerned about putting in another system."

So the neighbors went to the town for help. The first setback occurred when a warrant article last spring that would have allowed the town to take over the private treatment plant that serves the 38 condominiums at 100 Pond Street near the Mendel Road condos was withdrawn. It turns out the treatment plant at 100 Pond St. does not have a groundwater discharge permit from the state Department of Environmental Protection as required. Mendel Road hoped it could hook up to 100 Pond St. as a stopgap measure and then connect through 100 Pond to the sewer when 100 Pond, which is in the Central District, was connected.

"So here we are, a ton of research and a ton of money later."

— Mark Brennan, Mendel Road

Obtaining a groundwater permit requires a hydrological study that could cost $25,000, according to health board member Stephen Bobo. He said the health board "tried very earnestly" to get Mendel Road hooked up to 100 Pond and was disappointed when the warrant article was withdrawn.

But even if the discharge permit were obtained, without town help it would still be cost prohibitive for the five Mendel Road neighbors to operate the Pond Street plant alone.

Tight tank

Last spring the health board put Olde Farm Hills on a "tight tank" when effluent break out was discovered there. The tight tank — which involved capping off the leaching field — lasted only a couple of days. The neighbors decided it was cheaper to pay the fine of $50 a day than to pay several times that much to have the tank pumped every two days.

Bobo described the Mendel Road situation as "lousy." As the $50 a day fines now amount to more than $4,600 the health board is faced with several options that include taking the neighbors to court to force them to repair their septic system or condemning the property.

"It's a mess," Bobo said, explaining that the septic system plans approved by the health board back in 1995 were incorrectly drawn.

With all their options seemingly exhausted, the neighbors appealed for mercy from the sewer commission but got none. Worried about overtaxing the newly upgraded treatment plant, the commission is adamant that no connections be made outside the district delineated by town meeting until the expanded sewer system is up and running. Only then if there is determined to be some excess capacity will connections outside the district possibly be allowed.

However, the commission has allowed for capacity from vacant lots in the district that may be "buildable" now that the sewer is coming — another factor that frustrates the neighbors. And in the past the sewer commission did make an exception for a group of homes off Atlantic Avenue called Newtonville. The septic systems there were polluting wetlands at the harbor and the commission finally agreed to hook the homes up through Elm Street.

"They say there isn't capacity even thought they will hook up vacant lots when there are taxpaying citizens just 100 yards away. This is ludicrous," Mark Brennan said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris is also bewildered by the possibility of new construction being connected to the sewer.

"I thought the theory was to try and sewer existing homes in town before allowing new construction," she said.

The neighbors, who are suing the engineer and contractor who repaired the system in 1995, are now contemplating legal action against the town.

McMorris hopes the Mendel Road neighbors will try the town meeting route before getting involved in more litigation.

"The homeowners have the option of petitioning town meeting for inclusion in the district," she said. Selectmen will ask the sewer commission and building inspector to attend an upcoming meeting to discuss Mendel Road.

Sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury, who supported hooking the Newtonville neighbors up to the Central District because they had no alternative, said the Mendel Road homeowners do have an option.

"They can make a mounded system," he said. "They aren't very pretty and they're expensive but the bottom line is that they can be done."

Rattenbury doesn't fault Mendel Road for trying to connect to the sewer.

"If I were in their shoes, I'd want someone else to bail me out too," he said. "It's not a case of it can't be done, it's a case of the expense involved."

While Rattenbury agreed that Mendel Road has the right to go to town meeting to have the district expanded to include them, he defends the sewer commission's stance on the issue.

"You have to sympathize with our board," he said. "We have to draw a line somewhere to define the boundaries of the district."

Mark and Pam Brennan stand outside their Tudor-style home on Mendel Road. Due to the septic history at the site, the Brennans and their neighbors fear repairing their failed joint septic system would be a waste of money and they want to hook up to the Central Cohasset Sewer District.

PLUMBING MUSINGS

by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829

"Good afternoon, Mr. Plumber! Are we glad you're here!"

Father Tom Foley phoned begging for a plumber to come to the Harbor to repair the water closet aboard his boat. Old Phil hemmed and hawed, telling him he really didn't know anything about boat plumbing. Grandpa finally said, "If you can't find anyone else, I'll send a plumber down later to see what we can do."

Well, of course, no one else would go. So Uncle Evan went to the Harbor where he was greeted by this group. They had rehearsed their little speech, and all spoke together, "Good afternoon, Mr. Plumber! Are we glad you're here!"

The group is the girls softball team from St. Mary of the Hills in Milton. They had won a sectional city title, and the prize was a boat trip to Cape Cod. When the head on board ship backed up, they pulled into Scituate Harbor for assistance. Lorna Barry, Gannett Road, Scituate, is the second girl from the left.

Selectmen want more information on KEDS

School day care program costing town benefit money

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

With the lack of extra money which the school department and the town have to work with, expenditures are being watched more closely than ever. Practically every nickel and dime is accounted for, and both town and school officials are cognizant of the need to keep track of how the money is spent.

It was with that in mind Monday that selectmen asked that the school committee and Supt. of Schools Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey come to a future meeting to explain why the town is paying $26,000 per year in benefits for a day-care program of the Cohasset Public Schools which was believed to be self-supporting.

A program of the school department since 1987, the Cohasset Enrichment Programs provide tuition-supported day care before and after school as well as afternoon care for students attending morning kindergarten and vice versa. The entire day care program is better known as KEDS, which stands for Kindergarten Enriched Day.

According to director Elizabeth Alpert, there are currently 96 children enrolled in the program. Because the school year has just begun, Alpert said that students are still enrolling. She said there are 61 children enrolled in the after-school program alone, an increase from last year.

Selectman Roseanne McMorris said the school committee needed to talk with the selectmen about the benefit part of the program.

"The school committee has made a decision on spending town money without our input," she said.

The KEDS program is not part of the school committee's budget, however, and is instead run by the superintendent's office. The school committee does not administer the program's finances because it was believed to be entirely self-supporting.

"To single out that program is unfair when every other school program works the same way. The overall issue of how benefits are paid may need to be examined in the future, but it's not right to single out this one program."

— Pat Martin, school committee

"The KEDS program is self-supporting in that all school employees are paid by the town," said school committee member Pat Martin. "To single out that program is unfair when every other school program works the same way. The overall issue of how benefits are paid may need to be examined in the future, but it's not right to single out this one program."

Leonora Jenkins, president of Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers, a tax watchdog group, said that making taxpayers pay for a program which is not part of the school budget is unfair.

"I don't think the elderly taxpayers of Cohasset should have to pay for a program that is not part of the school budget," she said. "The fact is that the program uses the school buildings [Deer Hill and Osgood] after school hours and doesn't pay for its own benefits."

The tuition fees for the program pay the salaries of the instructors, as well as snacks, supplies and gym equipment. Alpert said that she doesn't control how benefits are paid.

"That piece is handled by the superintendent's office," she said.

Because the program is non-profit, Alpert said any profits are redirected into other school programs.

"When there is a surplus, the money is taken to other school programs at the discretion of the superintendent," she said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that he had been informed by the school department that the program could not survive without the town subsidy because the increase in fees would shut down the program.

Although Malvey could not be reached for comment about the KEDS benefits, Martin said that the school committee has become more aware of the cost in benefits to the town when it hires new employees.

"When we hired a couple of new aides at our last meeting, they were each hired at 19 hours a week so they would not accrue benefits," she said. "We're becoming more sensitive to the benefit issue."

Unless the policies regarding benefits are changed, however, the town will continue to pay the benefits for all school employees who work over 20 hours a week, including KEDS instructors.

"The problem with looking at the KEDS benefits is that you get into philosophical discussions about what school employees the town wants to pay," Martin said.

Selectmen to propose four new firefighters looked at six months of the last fiscal year and found we would have only spent $16,000 on overtime as opposed to $69,000." (see chart) "In addition, we will have paramedic care in our department. You have to decide if the extra money is worth better coverage of the shifts in the fire department and better care for the residents of Cohasset."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said that the addition of four paramedics in Cohasset is extremely important for the safety of people in town.

"I strongly support this program," she said. "My brother had a heart attack at a very young age and paramedics were able to save him. I know a woman in town who feels that she lost her husband because we didn't have this service. There is a certain segment of the town that benefits from programs in the schools, but this is something that will benefit everyone, and older people in particular."

The additional firefighters would allow the department to carry four six-man groups as opposed to the four five-man groups which currently exist. It is the policy of the fire department to keep four firefighters on duty at all times. With crews of five firefighters, the absence of a single firefighter for reason of injury, sickness or vacation already puts the staffing at its minimum limit.

When two of those four firefighters leave the station for an ambulance call, two off-duty firefighters must be called in to replace them. The off-duty firefighters who come in accrue a minimum of two hours of overtime pay for filling in. Overtime expenditures have skyrocketed as the minimal staffing has led to numerous callbacks.

In the first two months of FY 2000, the fire department has already spent more than $47,000 on overtime. The amount budgeted for the entire fiscal year is $128,602.

"Last year, we needed $79,000 in additional money to cover the overtime," Haddad said. "This year, we're on track for well over $100,000." (see chart) "That money can be more effectively spent to hire four new firefighter/paramedics."

Though bringing on four additional firefighter/paramedics will substantially reduce overtime in the fire department, officials say their role as paramedics may be more crucial to the town. As it stands now, the fire department has only one paramedic, Laura Morrison, who was hired last December. Those in town needing paramedic care must wait until paramedics arrive from South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, a distance of 12 miles.

"Right now, we have basic life support, CPR, first aid, splinting, and bandaging," said Silvia. "The paramedics from South Shore Hospital do cardiac arrest, drug therapy, and administer IVs. Right now, there's a delay waiting for the paramedics from South Shore. That delay can mean the difference between life and death."

Haddad said bringing paramedics on board will mean better emergency care for the residents of Cohasset.

"The EMT's [Emergency Medical Technicians] that we currently have do a wonderful job, but they are limited in the emergency services they can provide," he said. "We can't do any better than having paramedics in our own ambulance. They'll be the first ones at the scene, and that can mean the difference between life and death."

The cost of such an initiative is obviously a preeminent factor in whether it will gain approval at town meeting. Although hiring the additional firefighter/paramedics would cost $99,882 for the rest of FY 2000,

Vacancy	$ 2,206.01	$0.00	$2,206.01
Training	$3,296.87	$3,296.87	$0.00
Total	$69,209.31	$16,707.14	$52,502.17

Comparison done using actual FY 99 figures versus the same time period assuming that the fire department staffing levels were six groups of four firefighters with a minimum on-duty staff of four firefighters.

The total number of shift vacancies that were covered dropped from 106 to 14. The resulting drop in shifts covered is the reason for the difference in cost for bereavement, injury, personal day, sick, and vacancy.

The difference in callbacks was figured using the actual responses from FY 99 with the assumption of four 6 FF/ 4 FF minimum groups. The number of shifts where the department was at the minimum staffing dropped from 271 to 80. The actual responses were then checked for those 80 shifts where the department was at the 4 FF minimum. The approximate number of hours that would have had to been hired dropped to 219, which was then multiplied by the average overtime rate for the department for FY 99.

With the addition of four FF/paramedics, training overtime would probably have increased. However, it is not possible to figure the additional cost at this time.

the money for FY 2001 is already in the budget, according to Haddad.

Haddad said that the cost of four new firefighter/paramedics in FY2001 will be $188,684. Due to an unforeseen increase in new growth, he said that money which was to be allocated to debts could now be used to offset the costs of the new positions. The debts in question are a sewer betterment debt of $105,000 and a snow and ice deficit of $43,500.

"Originally, based on information from the assessors, we estimated new growth at $150,000," he said. "The state is going to approve $300,000 in new growth, which is $150,000 more than we had anticipated. Therefore, the money needed for the debts won't have to come from the stabilization fund but can come from the new growth that will increase the FY 2000 levy limit."

According to assessor Cheryl Pooler, new growth includes any changes to a person's property which alters the property value, such as building a new home, putting on an addition to an existing home , or creating a number of buildable lots on an existing property.

Because the sewer project will be completed, betterments will not have to be paid in FY 2001. Coupled with the fact that another snow and ice deficit is not expected, Haddad said that the money which was to be used for these items in FY 2000 can be considered a new revenue source for FY 2001.

"We have $150,000 that is appropriated but not allocated," he said. "That money can be used to offset the cost of the four firefighter/paramedics. I think the money should be used on this and it's not the first time I've proposed it."

Another $38,684 would have to be raised in addition to that $150,000 to cover the cost of the new firefighter/paramedics, but the reduction in overtime is likely to cover that amount.

COHASSET BLOOD DRIVE

Now that the leaves are beginning to turn color, don't let blood donations "fall." Give blood when the American Red Cross Bloodmobile comes to Cohasset Wednesday Sept. 22, at the First Parish Unitarian Church, 23 North Main St. Donor hours are 2 p.m. to 7 p.m. You don't need to make an appointment just walk in.

During the summer months blood donations generally decrease as even regular donors become involved in warm weather activities. Now that autumn has arrived, donors are needed to help build inventories back to safe levels.

The New England Blood Services must collect 1,300 units of blood daily in order to meet patient needs. Blood is used for surgery, accidents, chemotherapy, kidney dialysis and many other life-threatening conditions. There is no substitute for blood. Its only source is a healthy caring volunteer donor.

Call Carol Riley for information at 383-6215.

NEW ARRIVAL

Let's give a huge Cohasset welcome to Quentin Roger Hill, the son of Joanne and Roger Hill of Cohasset. Quentin was born at South Shore Hospital Aug. 18. He weighed 9 lbs. 4 ozs. and was 21 inches long. His arrival time was 3:58 a.m.

Congratulations, give Quentin a hug for all of us!

COLLEGE HONORS

Brandon W. Devoe was named to the faculty's list for the spring term at Roanoke College. Brandon is the son of Mrs. Marjorie L. Devoe of Elm Court and Mr. Walter Bernard Devoe of Georgia. Great going, Brandon!

HARD WORK PAYS OFF

Matthew David Keefe has earned himself a spot on the President's List at Plymouth State College. He had to achieve a grade point average of 3.7 or better to do so. Hard work really does pay off. Congratulations Matthew!

COLLEGE SCHOLAR

The National Society of Collegiate Scholars recently accepted Ashley Wilfand. She will be inducted into the society this fall, and will be honored at a campus ceremony.

Ashley is in her sophomore year at Cornell University. She is the daughter of Wendy and Robert Wilfand of Cohasset.

We are all very proud of you Ashley!!

CONSIGNMENT SHOP

It's back — The Cohasset Consignment shop has opened for the fall, after a well-deserved summer break! Located in Tedeschi's Plaza on Route 3A.

They have a great selection of men and women's suits, wonderful paintings, china, baskets and an assortment of linens. And, there are more items arriving daily!

Be sure to check it out (all proceeds go to the Social Service League). They are also looking for volunteers to work. If you wish to do so call 383-0687.

Something new and different to serve

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

The time has come to plan menus in earnest, after a summer that was so hot it was hard to cook! Now it is fun to plan your meals and everyone really enjoys eating them. It's also the time when you begin to entertain again, and are looking for something new and different to serve.

While the price of lobster is still reasonable, here is an unusual dish that I think all will love.

LOBSTER CUTLETS

2 cups cooked lobster meat
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 cup condensed mushroom soup
1 cup fine bread crumbs
1 egg beaten
1 tablespoon water

Combine lobster, salt, mustard, lemon juice and soup; shape into 5 cutlets about 1 inch thick. Dip each cutlet into bread crumbs then egg beaten with water, and again in bread crumbs. Place in a 9-inch-square greased pan. Bake at 400 degrees for 30 minutes Serves 5.

With the cutlets serve tartar sauce, some nice potatoes au gratin (they can be cooked at the same time), a nice green vegetable, and a yummy dessert.

POTATOES AU GRATIN

3 tbsp butter
3 tbsps flour
1/2 tsp salt
1/8 tsp pepper
1/4 tsp dry mustard
2 cups milk
6 medium-sized boiled potatoes
1 cup grated American cheese (or cheese of your choice)
1/4 cup bread crumbs

Melt butter in saucepan; add flour, salt, pepper and mustard. Slowly pour in milk and cook until mixture thickens stirring constantly. Dice potatoes into 1/2-inch cubes; place them in a greased 8-inch-square baking pan. Pour sauce over potatoes and sprinkle with a mixture of cheese and crumbs. Bake right along with the Lobster Cutlets, at 400 degrees for 30 minutes.

Enjoy!!

Scouts to paint Common bus stop

During Monday night's selectmen's meeting, selectman Merle Brown announced that scouts will paint the bus stop on the Common

The project has been put off because high school students were scheduled to paint the structure as part of their community service projects. Students, however, do not typically perform their community service until spring. The availability of the scouts will allow the project to be completed sooner.

"I think they'll paint it a nice, bright shade of orange," joked Brown.

Unsightly sites

It's truly difficult to fully appreciate the frustrations and disappointments Ted Malloy has had to endure. As the neighbor of a default toxic site in Abington, he's at his wit's end to get someone to pay attention to him and get some action in his otherwise quiet and residential neighborhood. The former Continental Mattress building has become a blight on the neighborhood, with its falling down structures, abandoned trailers and leftover debris.

There are countless safety hazards at the site, which sits at the end of a tree-lined street with modest homes for families and young children. But neighbors are just as concerned about what you don't see — what health hazards and toxins continue to go unchecked.

And there are numerous other "default" sites dotting the South Shore landscape. Our report last week gave in detail the number of default sites in the region — from "minor" gas spills to leaking fuel tanks threatening neighboring water supplies. These are considered by the state to be less important than other critical projects demanding action, such as the Baird & McGuire plant in Holbrook and the Massachusetts Military Reservation cleanup on Cape Cod.

But they matter to the neighbors and should to most of us. People like Malloy have been getting nowhere with state and local officials. No one wants to ultimately claim responsibility for the Continental property for an obvious reason—the cost of cleanup. Yet people like Malloy have to put up with the mess and potential uncertainty about what's at the site.

The state Department of Environmental Protection says there's nothing to be concerned about right now. The DEP says it has done some checking and there are no "immediate health risks" associated with the Abington property.

"Heck, we can't get to everything and we have to prioritize," says a DEP spokesperson. "If we tried to clean up every default site it would cost over a billion dollars."

Action toward begin to move in the right direction this week after town selectmen issued a statement indicating several "significant developments" are underway. One being a foreclosure auction on the property. The selectmen and others deserve some credit for finally stepping up to the plate on this. Now we need to make sure commitments are upheld.

We understand the DEP has priorities and we recognize that projects like the Baird & McGuire plant in Holbrook and the MMR site on the Upper Cape have far more reaching implications. Still, it's intolerable for a property like the one in Abington to go unattended for so long by all of the agencies involved, both at the state and federal levels. What good are laws and consequences to your actions if no one is policing and keeping land owners accountable.

With all the resources at their fingertips, the state DEP and the local governments should work together to address the default sites and come up with solutions for the worst ones. There have been endless studies and inspections of these default sites, but little action.

The piles of paperwork and studies amount to nothing in the eyes of citizens like Malloy unless they are accompanied by action to protect his property and the health of the children in his neighborhood.

Cohasset Trucks with Character

Third in a series of what makes Cohasset unique

Dick Poland's red Jimmy Sierra is a familiar sight to all Cohasset weekend RTF afficianados. It's as well-labeled as is Dick's crisp DPW blue uniform. With stars and stripes waving from the radio antenna, the back window is also emblazened with flag decals and stickers – a testimonial to Dick's patriotism, affiliations, favorite restaurant and personal philosophy. For those of you who can remember way back to pre-air conditioning days, the Jimmy has side vents on the windows.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Elm Street project opposed

TO THE EDITOR:

We, as concerned residents of Cohasset, want to thank all those who have expressed their reservations on the proposed Elm Street Linkage Walkway Project, the grant for which was denied by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC) this past week. While we breathe a sigh of relief, we must also be aware that this proposal may very well become active again in the next fiscal year (FY2001) or subsequent fiscal years.

This project was put before the MAPC with very little input from our town's residents, or Elm Street residents for that matter. In fact, there was no query of the residents of the Senior Housing on Elm Street. Interestingly, the grant denial letter was sent to the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, not to our town Selectmen.

It appears this project is part of the Cohasset Harbor Access Study. As such, the project speaks of making Elm Street safer by narrowing the street, of making it more interesting and to quote the application, more "rewarding" for tourists (and residents?) and of linking the harbor with the village center. Are any of these adequate reasons to spend $230,000? A narrower street does not make a safer street. A residential street doesn't change its zoning by putting in peninsulas or bike paths. Nor does a canopy of Elm trees along the street improve the viability of any commercial endeavor. It does not appear that this linkage benefits the town's residents. It would be money ill-spent. There are more important projects that should be considered such as curb cuts, cross walks, and refurbishing those existing sidewalks that are cracked and uneven.

Again, we thank those interested residents for their comments opposing this project, remind them we must remain vigilant and close with the cliche: "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

SAFE has more work to do

TO THE EDITOR:

Now that the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) has been shut down for over a year and its Site Assignment has been rescinded, and the Area V landfill expansion has been defeated, does that mean SAFE's work is completed?

No, we still have a lot of work to do. There are still over 1 million tons of solid waste in the closed landfill, which will continue to drain contaminated landfill leachate into the Lily Pond watershed, damage adjacent wetlands, and emit hazardous air pollutants for many years to come.

We need to require CHL to dig a groundwater diversion trench around the landfill, to keep landfill leachate from draining into the Lily Pond watershed, which is our public drinking water supply. Also, CHL must be required to meet a "zero discharge" standard for stormwater runoff into the watershed—meaning no surface water runoff can be allowed to leave the landfill property. Finally, CHL must be required to install an active gas collection and treatment system to prevent landfill odors and protect local air quality.

These measures should be included in CHL's final closure plan, which is now under review by the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP). Since DEP will be having a public hearing on the closure plan later this year, that hearing will be an opportunity to persuade DEP to include these provisions into the landfill closure plan.

Finally, CHL has resurrected the Area V expansion proposal, with some minor changes, and will undoubtedly be reapplying to the Board of Health for a Site Assignment for this new area if and when the DEP lifts the existing moratorium on new landfill Site Assignments. Since DEP is probably going to lift the moratorium by next March, we have about six months before those new hearings start.

Jean and I—and Alzheimer's

Dan and Jean Cotton at the Harbor House Adult Day Health Center in Hingham.

By Dan Cotton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Jean has always been modest, fun-loving, a little reserved, and seemed to know instinctively what to do in any situation. She never crossed a bridge unto she came to it. She accepted the business at hand as a matter of course. No fuss, no fanfare. It was that way at KUA, the school where we met, at college, as a teacher, and it continued when we settled in Cohasset. Always a willing participant, she never sought or ran for public office. She was constantly involved, however, and accepted appointments and leadership roles as needed.

In Cohasset, where we have lived for more than 50 years, she was active in Girl Scouts, was president of the Parent Teachers Association, helped organize and served as president of a local chapter of the League of Women Voters. For years, she was on the board and was president of the Social Service League. She was a principle founder of the Cohasset Consignment shop and managed it for many years. She was instrumental in the creation of a younger mother's alliance at First Parish; this later became a couples' club, which was important to the church life of the time. She served on various church committees, including the Parish Committee, which she chaired. She earned town-wide respect for service on the town's advisory committee, of which she was chair for 4 1/2 years during the challenging time when Proposition 2 1/2 was introduced. Jean's forte was management and working with people. She liked people (still does) and enjoyed working with them. They responded in kind, the machinery ran smoothly, and work was done well. Jean achieved by example and never at the cost of principle.

Like many other misfortunes, Alzheimer's, so it seemed, only happened to other people. It was inconceivable that it could happen to Jean. She was and always has been such a rock. I could depend on her good judgment when facing any serious issue. She seemed to instinctively know the answers to problems I'd puzzle over for hours—even days. I could not accept that Jean was afflicted when I noticed that she was forgetting familiar things, such as the location of the headlight switch in the car. Always an excellent and careful driver, her attention began to wander. Then she began to be confused in following a heretofore well-known route. Finally, I rode with her just to reassure her, until she just missed having a serious accident. Meanwhile, she'd been hiding her pocketbook and then couldn't find it. We found it, and I put her license and credit cards in our safe deposit box. All this took place over some two years, during which time I chose neither to admit it to myself nor to discuss it. Our daughters convinced me it would be best to acknowledge the situation, at least to myself. They were right. It became easier to handle.

Our doctor had us see a psychologist and then a psychiatrist, as well as prescribing a CAT scan and MRI. The word "Alzheimer's" was not mentioned, but the diagnosis was plain. The only useful advice was that reasoning would be futile. The doctor advised me on care giving. I carefully hid any literature concerning Alzheimer's.

Time and routine lost their significance; Jean slept when she felt like it. One morning, after a restless night, I've awakened at about 8 a.m. (late for me) by four police officers. Jean was not there. She had walked in her nightie and bathrobe over next door and told our neighbors something about a man in the house. They had called the police. I then put a lock on the door at the foot of the stairs. A couple of weeks later, I was working in the cabin (my office off the living room) around noon when a friend came in to tell me he'd picked up Jean walking up Forest Avenue carrying an armload of blankets. I put special locks on the outside doors. I put similar locks on the screen doors at camp after Jeannie would up at the neighbor's, almost a quarter mile away. I'd worried some before I found her. Things can happen.

Progress being made on toxic sites

Editor's note: The author is the deputy regional director for the state Department of Environmental Protection's Bureau of Waste Site Cleanup, Southeast Region.

GUEST COLUMNIST

MILLIE GARCIA-SURETTE

The Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) is concerned that information in Christopher Szechenyi's Sept. 9 article may unnecessarily distress your readers. I would like to share recent progress our Bureau of Waste Site Cleanup (BWSC) has made on environmental compliance and enforcement initiatives, particularly as they relate to the contaminated sites discussed in the article.

The privatized Waste Site Cleanup Program has significantly increased the number of cleanups and site closures statewide. More than 9,500 risk reduction measures have been implemented since 1993 and more than 14 times as many sites have been fully cleaned up in the first four years of the new program than in the previous four years. More than 7,200 assessments and cleanups of sites or spills have received "sign off" for closure purposes.

These numbers represent a significant increase in the pace of cleanup and closures. Most importantly, these changes allow DEP itself to focus resources on sites presenting the highest level of unacceptable risk to public health and the environment.

Since 1995, DEP staff has reviewed the "non-responder" sites list to ensure timely response. As a result, we have enhanced compliance and enforcement against these responsible parties, increased coordination with the US Environmental Protection Agency, and executed work using state funds. Together, these strategies have yielded significant yearly reductions of hazards posed by "non-responder" sites.

Non-responder sites are often those where responsible parties are financially challenged, either because they have filed bankruptcy or are otherwise unable to pay for necessary cleanup costs. Through the Brownfields Act of 1998, DEP can spur development of contaminated properties, while providing liability relief and state financial assistance to innocent parties who cleanup and redevelop these sites. By working as a facilitator, DEP coordinates Brownfields revitalization efforts with local municipalities, redevelopment authorities, planning agencies, and sister agencies. In fact, the Perx Products, Inc. site (former Continental Mattress Co.) in Abington was discussed at a recent meeting between DEP and the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs on potential Brownfields sites.

The Perx Products Inc. site is an excellent candidate for Brownfields redevelopment. In 1995, DEP requested that the responsible party build a fence to protect the public from contact with the site's lead-contaminated soil. Although the immediate public health threat was addressed, future response actions will permanently close out the site. Any structural safety issues the site may pose are not within DEP's jurisdiction and are usually addressed by local health and safety agencies.

DEP is committed to protecting public health and the environment. Our goal is to reduce risks from contaminated sites by responding to spills and other contaminant releases. For many of the sites discussed in the article, we have already required — and conducted — early risk reduction and removal actions.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on two roll calls from House debate on a proposed $21 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. The House and Senate have not agreed on a compromise version of the budget. House Speaker Tom Finneran and Senate President Tom Birmingham have been meeting regularly but have yet to hash out a plan acceptable to both. The legislature has been approving temporary monthly budgets in order to stay afloat. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.
ADOPTION EXPENSE DEDUCTION(H 4400) House 153-0, approved an amendment providing taxpayers with a tax deduction for any fee they pay to a licensed child adoption agency. The amendment replaces a proposal allowing a deduction but capping it at $3600 in 2001, $7200 in 2002 and $9600 in 2003. Amendment supporters said the state should do everything it can to encourage adoption. They noted that allowing an unlimited cap for deducting adoption expenses is a step in the right direction. (A "Yea" vote is for the unlimited deduction of adoption expenses).		Y
LOW INCOME HOUSING(H 4400) House 152-0, approved an amendment providing $20 million in tax credits over five years to private and non-profit developers who build low income housing projects. The credits would be used by developers to attract investors who would invest in the projects by buying the tax credits for about 80 cents on the dollar. Amendment supporters, noting the high cost of rental units, said there is a great need for affordable housing in the state. They said this system of tax credits works better than subsidies and low-interest loans and will encourage investors, create jobs and build up to 4000 units of affordable housing. They noted the system is similar to a federal one which has already resulted in over 13,000 units of housing in the state. ("Yea" vote is for the amendment).		Y

organist-choirmaster at St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset. Along with fellow faculty member Evelyn Czaja, Guzasky is opening a branch of the Boston Conservatory in Cohasset.

The Cohasset campus will be based at the Nativity of the Virgin Mary Church on Jerusalem Road and registration will be held there on Sat., Sept. 25 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

"The Boston Conservatory in Cohasset is a branch of our school and students will be able to share in the same programs as the students in Boston," Guzasky said. "We welcome students of all ages: children, adults, and senior citizens. We feel we have a lot to offer the South Shore area with our expertise and flexible teaching hours, which will include lessons during the daytime, evenings, and Saturdays."

Guzasky will teach classes in piano and organ at the new school, while Czaja will teach voice classes. Instruction in strings, woodwinds, brass, and other instruments will be made available according to enrollment.

"It's really myself and Evelyn initiating this," Guzasky said, "but other teachers and instructors will come to Cohasset as needed."

Czaja, a mezzo-soprano, has sung with the Chicago Opera Theater and with the Northwest Symphony of Illinois, under the direction of Peter Crafton, formerly of the Chicago Symphony. She holds a master's degree in applied vocal pedagogy from Chicago's Northeastern Illinois University.

Guzasky has taught classes at the St. Petersburg Conservatory in Russia as well as Millikin University, eastern Illinois University, and Boston University. He has performed numerous times as a recitalist in Russia, Latvia, and England, receiving the Boston University Outstanding Performance Award.

The Boston Conservatory currently operates one other satellite school in Andover. Guzasky said Cohasset was the perfect town in which to open a location on the South Shore.

"We've been looking for a place to do this and there a lot of people in Cohasset who really enjoy classical music," he said. "Not all towns are conducive to something like this. I live in Malden, for example, and I wouldn't dream of opening a conservatory there."

Guzasky said even though the Cohasset campus will be a satellite school, its students will receive the same opportunities that Boston students enjoy.

Dr. G. Frederick Guzasky is opening a branch of The Boston Conservatory in Cohasset.

Classes will be held at the Nativity of theVirgin Mary Church on Jerusalem Road.

"We feel we have a lot to offer the South Shore area with our expertise and flexible teaching hours, which will include lessons during the daytime, evenings, and Saturdays."

— Dr. G. Frederick Guzasky, instructor

"Cohasset students may enjoy all of the benefits of Boston Conservatory students, taking part in Conservatory organizations and ensembles both in Cohasset and in Boston. Plans include instrumental ensembles such as band and orchestra for area students."

Jean and I—and Alzheimer's

along well. Jean visited Harbor House Adult Care Center in January 1996 and has been going Mondays and Fridays since. She enjoys the social interaction, and the people there enjoy her.

Since the onset of her condition, Jean has become more given to emotion. While she was always quick to laugh and might get angry, albeit not readily, my only clear recollection of her really crying was when close family members and her favorite dogs died. She has begun to more keenly feel the loss of her parents and to grieve for her brothers. She cries from what seems to be helpless frustration and almost apologetically declares that she can't help it. She was never given to affectation, and I don't believe she is now. What saddens me is her apparent awareness of and frustration with her condition. Things that once were well in hand are now beyond her control; something she can't identify is missing, lost. It hurts to see her hurt. The only help I've found is to distract her.

Strangely, she can switch quickly to a happy mood. The happy mood is not strange; the sudden switch is. She loves to clap hands rhythmically and at Harbor House, she dances when there is music. This is not new. She enjoys being with people, and it's just plain exuberance. She thoroughly enjoys little kids and watches Sesame Street, etc. while I get breakfast—complete with hand clapping. At times I find her chuckling over a passing thought. These happy moods are worth the price of admission. None of these moods are out of character, I think. It's just that the expression is different. It's the same Jeannie all the while, and that's the good part.

As I guess most know, Alzheimer's is best known for involving the loss of memory, and there are a lot of ramifications. Jean can read words, but I don't believe she can any longer understand the meaning of a string of words. Speech seems somewhat less of a problem, at least at present. She's still quick to "catch on" and enjoys quips. She seems to observe action as it takes place but apparently not as a continuum, which limits her ability to enjoy a book, a movie, or anything with a plot line. Her college major was drama, which she thoroughly enjoyed, both as a spectator and as a participant. She taught high school English, and she had been an avid reader.

Her world seems more confined to her own participation, in contrast to abstraction. She sometimes appears not to hear or see what's pointed out to her. Getting her attention is sometimes difficult. I am satisfied that she is not ignoring me or others, but is rather lost in her own world, which appears to be confused, or at least oriented differently from the rest of ours. She is given to illusion, seeing or hearing things that don't seem to be where she thinks they are. She picks nothing off the floor and hands it to me; I put it in my pocket. She also moves things to strange and unexpected places. We have a little hide and seek, which I must admit is time consuming. I am certain this seeming mischief has its own "logic" for Jean and may very likely be her way of doing the housework, which had always been her responsibility, as well as providing a way of fulfilling a need to feel responsible.

Jean is not and never has been destructive. She cut a couple of nice cloth napkins in two, figuring, as I understood it, she'd have twice as many. I've now hidden the scissors and repaired the napkins. She was never a furniture rearranger; once placed, things generally stayed put. Now she moves chairs and smaller objects with regularity. Sometimes ceramics and basketry are carefully arranged on the floor; scatter rugs are less carefully arranged. It's not all bad; it's just that I'm now doing what Jeannie used to do—picking things up and putting them back.

It's not all sweetness and light, however. Jeannie can dig in her heels when she feels she's had enough. She's sensitive to being bossed, and I sometimes run short of tact. My logic is of no avail, and fussing over it only hurts her and achieves nothing good. I have to remind myself that because she cannot reason or remember, the lessons don't stick, so why bother with a lot of useless talk.

She has become more consciously dependent on me in particular, which is not surprising. She freely and openly expresses her love for me, which in a way is surprising. While there was never any question about her love, she was reluctant to take the initiative in expressing it. Now, at times, she becomes so filled with emotion that she is moved to tears. There is an intense satisfaction in the feeling of being needed; it makes us feel useful and worthwhile. People need to be needed, if for nothing more than to justify their existence. This is as true for Jeannie as it is for me. I fancy that all living creatures share this feeling. Talk it over with your dog some time. You'll both enjoy it. And that isn't all. Answering the need, responding to it, brings the wheel full circle. It can be a beautiful thing.

Looking back, there is, like it or not, a barely discernible, gradual retrogression in Jean's abilities that I gather will continue. I find myself adjusting slowly, dealing with new developments as they take place. I find myself quicker to respond than I did early on. We hadn't wished for this business. It has changed our lives in unanticipated ways. I don't know that that's bad or even disappointing. Jean pretty much accepts our situation, and so do I. I've come to view all this as flotsam and jetsam on the sea of ordinary living. So we go with the flow. I recall the words of a good friend whose advice I often sought, when I commiserated with him in a situation like mine now. "Dan, I wouldn't change a thing." Only recently, I have begun to understand. I think it has to do with appreciating and enjoying what we have, rather than regretting the loss of what we had.

Jeannie and I have had an abundance of love for more than 60 years, and it has grown the while. It seems now to be blossoming. We have had a good life; we continue to have, and we are grateful. No, I would not change a thing.

I wrote this so that folks who have known Jean would better understand. Perhaps it will help others a little, too.

Harbor House Rehabilitation and Nursing Center, located at 11 Condito Road in Hingham, is a 142-bed skilled nursing facility that offers an Adult Day Health Center, a dedicated Alzheimer's Care Unit, and an Intergenerational Child Day Care Program. It is owned and operated by Norwell-based Welch Healthcare and Retirement Group, which this year celebrates 50 years of being the most trusted name in senior and rehabilitative healthcare services on the South Shore.

Diagnosing Alzheimer's Disease

On Wednesday, Sept. 22 at 7:30 p.m. the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore will present Sanford Auerbach, M.D. who will speak on "The Diagnosis of Alzheimer's Disease" at the Hingham Senior Center, 220 Central Street, Hingham. Dr. Auerbach is acting chairman of the Department of Neurology at Boston Medical Center and an Associate Professor of Neurology at Boston University School of Medicine. He serves on the scientific advisory board of the Alzheimer's Association of Eastern Massachusetts and on the board of the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore.

Dr. Auerbach will explain how a diagnosis of the disease is made and will discuss the latest developments in drug therapy and the need for a thorough diagnosis by a memory disorder specialist.

The new meeting place for the meetings will be the Hingham Senior Center located in the new Hingham town hall, 220 Central St.

These meetings are open to anyone interested in learning more about Alzheimer's Disease and are free of charge. Please call JoAnn Mitchell 781-749-5417 or Ruth Scully 781-740-2426 for more information.

Gift of park has local connection

Parents donate son's land to Plympton

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Harry S. Jason Jr. never got the chance to fulfill his dream.

The 54-year-old Cohasset native succumbed to cancer before he could build a house on the acreage he'd owned in Plympton for years.

But thanks to his parents, Alice and Harry Sr. of Ash Street, Jason's legacy will soon the answer the dreams of an entire town.

The Jasons donated 53 acres of land, which their son owned, to the town of Plympton with the stipulation that it be used for recreation.

Plympton officials conducted a ceremony Sunday dedicating the Harry S. Jason Jr. Park.

"This is something the whole town can benefit from," said Plympton Selectman Joe Freitas, whose wife Jackie serves as chairman of the Jason Park study and development committee. "We're in need of ball fields. We don't have a soccer field or a Babe Ruth size field."

Walking and bicycle trails and picnic and fishing areas are also planned, Freitas said.

"We have all kinds of plans and we're very excited about it," he said.

"It's the finest gift the town of Plympton has ever received."
— Selectman Joe Frietas

Jason bought the land in 1981 and spent his leisure time on the land doing farming and landscape work. Eventually he wanted to live there.

Alice Jason said her son, who lived in Quincy, traveled all over the world through his job with Gillette. The Jasons have lived in Cohasset 62 years. Harry Jr. graduated from Cohasset High in 1961.

"He loved conservation, the woods and the outdoors," Alice Jason said.

Freitas said Plympton citizens accepted the land by unanimous vote at town meeting last spring.

"It's the finest gift the town of Plympton has ever received," he said. "We could never go out and buy a piece of land like that."

Making the park a reality will require money obviously, Freitas said. The park committee will ask the May town meeting for $3,000 to pay for a botanist to delineate the wetlands and an engineer to lay out the fields. But Freitas is optimistic making the park a reality won't be difficult.

"There is a long list of people who will donate time, equipment and services," he said.

Harry Jason, shown here in his yearbook photo, was a member of the CHS Class of 1961.

Girls soccer coach Debbie Beal watches Alissa Conley's technique during varsity practice at Milliken Field.

Lady Skippers look to contend in SSL

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Deb Beal could see some definite positives coming out of the Cohasset High girls soccer team's season-opening, 3-0 loss to Norton. Most notably, the Lady Skippers' second-year coach was certainly impressed with the play of freshman netminder Maura O'Brien.

"She got right in there and held her own," said Beal. "Maura really kept her composure and came up with five or six big saves."

Cohasset will undoubtedly have some big moments this fall in its quest to reach a .500 record, and possibly, a South Sectional tourney berth. To attain that .500 mark, the Lady Skippers' must become proficient on the transition aspect of their game and pepper opposing goalies with more shots.

Cohasset had very little opportunity to put together offensive attacks last fall. More often than not, the Lady Skippers were in their own end working frantically to turn away opposing offenses. The team wound up with a 3-13-1 record.

"Transition is what we're going to work on," said Beal. "Last year we were under the gun for a solid 80 minutes a game. It's all a mental thing. It's just a matter of making that run upfield."

Beal would like to see Cohasset average at least two goals per game this season, a feat it wasn't able to accomplish against the Lady Lancers Tuesday.

The Lady Skippers trailed just 1-0 in the first half with O'Brien making some big plays between the posts. Norton opened up the game 27 minutes into the second half when a Lady Lancer took à cross pass and beat O'Brien. Cohasset wasn't able to generate as much offense as Beal wold have liked and Norton took advantage by adding another insurance tally in the closing minutes of the game.

Cohasset, though, already looks better than it did at this point last year and Beal only expects the team to improve with every game it plays. The Lady Skippers are scheduled to hit the road and play what looks to be a very strong Norwell squad this afternoon. They return home for games against Randolph and Hull Tuesday and Friday, respectively.

"Norwell's going to be tough," Beal conceded. "I have no idea about Randolph. Hull should be a good game."

Beal believes she has the players to make the season a successful one for the Lady Skippers. Eileen Ridge, the returning South Shore League all-star midfielder, should make a definite impact for Cohasset and only help the transition game Beal so desperately wants to see.

"She's looking to take her game to the next level and wants to play in college," Beal said of the talented Ridge.

Add sweeper Jenny Chastain to the mix, along with outside backs Maura Duffy and Jessie Zerendow, and the Lady Skippers have some legitimate weapons opponents have to keep in check.

As is the case every year, the SSL should be sending a handful of teams to the postseason come tourney time. Hanover and Abington

Young football squad looks to contend for South Shore crown

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The reality of the Cohasset High football team's prospects for the 1999 season came to light after the Skippers' long-awaited victory over the rival Hull High team last Thanksgiving.

The win capped a rebirth season for Cohasset under head coach Tony Rolfe as the Skippers finished with a promising 5-5 record that breathed life back into the football program.

Questions surround the Skippers this season, due more to to whom they have lost than the players on the roster.

Cohasset will have its hands full this fall after graduating 14 seniors, "all players" in Rolfe's eyes. The Skippers will head into this season with a team chock-full of sophomores who should see plenty of playing time in what looks to be a tough South Shore League schedule.

Rolfe, though, likes the progress the young Cohasset team has made during the preseason and plans to make several adjustments leading into the Skippers' season opener, Sept. 17 at home against Mashpee.

"We knew last year what was going to happen and what the situation was," said Rolfe. "Every day we're hoping to get a little better."

Cohasset's opponents should have their hands full catching up to the speedy backfield tandem of running backs Dan Trowers and Brian

Change is a good thing for Skipper field hockey team

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

It's been a season of change for the Cohasset High field hockey team.

Coach Debbie Bostwick is in the process of switching players around in their positions in order to get the best lineup on the field. Some of the players who played on the wings are now moving to the middle this year.

"They are learning their responsibilities," said the coach. "That takes a little time."

The other change is that players who were back-ups last year are now full-time players.

"They're working on their stamina as they have never played a full game," said Bostwick.

Even with all of the changes, the Skippers delivered a solid effort against Hingham on Monday, dropping a 2-1 decision to a strong Harbormen club.

Goalie Krysten Considine played well in net and received a strong performance from her defense.

"We've improved on defense," said Bostwick.

Hingham jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first half on a goal by Mel Dobson.

The Harbormen then increased the lead to 2-0 in the second half as Catherine Howlett scored, but Cohasset got a goal from Melissa Pyform to cut the margin to one.

"We battled back," said Bostwick, whose team will travel to East Bridgewater on Friday before hosting Mashpee on Tuesday.

Suiting up for Cohasset in Monday's varsity game were Jenn Meehan, Melissa Pyform, Andi Shaughnessy, Maggie O'Connor, Kelly Devine, Morgan Hurley, Ashley Ulmer, Kelly Wordan, Sarah Kidder, Naomi Ansberg, Krysten Considine, Kellie Straughn, Karen McMorris, Lydia Guild, Susan Devine and Melissa Rosano.

Coastal Stars announces programs

The Coastal Stars youth hockey program announces that registration for the 1999-2000 Learn to Skate, Pre-Hockey and Instructional Hockey programs will be held at the Ventress Library, Route 139, Marshfield on Sept. 18 from 12:30-5 p.m.

The costs are as follows:

The Learn to Skate program will have two consecutive sessions. The first session will begin Saturday, Oct. 9 at 5 p.m. at the Hobomock Arena in Pembroke and run through Jan. 1, 2000. The cost will be $65 and an additional one time $12 registration fee will be required.

The Pre-Hockey program will begin Oct. 16 at Hobomock Arena in Pembroke and runs through April 8, 2000. The program skates Saturday at 5:30 a.m.. The cost is $199.

The Instructional Hockey program begins Oct. 9 at 5 p.m. at the Hobomock Arena in Pembroke. The eligible ages are born between June 30, 1990 and June 30, 1994. The cost for the program is $250.

Krupczak. Both starred on the Skippers' track team last spring and that speed should translate nicely on the football field when they hit the holes that, hopefully, the offensive line can open for them.

"We do have good team speed," Rolfe said. "Speed is one of our assets."

Much of that responsibility will rely on the play of veteran offensive tackles Craig Parker and Craig Davis. The pair has played impressively in the Skippers' three preseason scrimmages and are only expected to get stronger with every down.

Davis and Parker will also be the two players opposing coaches will focus on when Cohasset's defense is on the field. With Parker holding down a defensive tackle spot and Davis expected to put on a strong pursuit from his end position, the Skippers have two veterans offensive linemen must contain if they hope to put points on the board.

The starting quarterback job looks to be one of the most stable on the team with sophomore Jason Brown barking the count. Brown has impressed Rolfe, particularly with his composure and poise in leading the offense.

"I'm pleased with what he's doing," Rolfe said. "We've had three scrimmages and he has gotten better with every one."

Blessed with a strong passing arm and the ability to move well when forced out of the pocket, Brown is "not intimidated by the job." What he lacks in overall experience Brown more than makes up for in confidence. Mentally, Brown is tough and doesn't get rattled by opposing defenses.

"Nothing seems to bother him," Rolfe said.

As impressed as Rolfe is with the progress the Skippers have, so far, made in the preseason, he plans to continue moving players around and "tuning" the team before facing Mashpee.

It's no surprise he considers defending two-time Super Bowl champs Norwell High to be the SSL favorite, along with what is shaping up to be a very strong Carver High team. Hanover and Abington should also figure into the mix. Then there's long-time rival, Hull, which opens its season this evening.

Rolfe isn' envious of Hull High coach John Anderson, whose Pirate team opens this evening. The Skippers, instead, have a week of invaluable practice time the coach of any young football team would embrace in early September.

Rolfe gets another look at his team in action tonight in the SSL Jamboree. The annual exhibition kicks off at 5 p.m. at Cohasset and gives the Skippers the chance to play in front of a crowd for the first time this season. Cohasset is scheduled to play one half against John Sullivan's Hanover team and Jim Kelliher's Abington High squad.

Rolfe expects to see a different Cohasset team in November, compared to the September product.

"By the end of the season," Rolfe said, "I see us having improved a great deal."

Cohasset Little League tryouts for '00 Major League season announced

The Cohasset Youth Baseball Association (CYBA) has announced that on Saturday, Sept. 18, at 2 p.m. at Barnes Field on North Main Street, the tryouts for the 2000 major league season will be conducted.

Youngsters who will be either 10, 11 or 12 years old on or before July 31, 2000 and are not currently playing at the major league level, are invited and encouraged to participate in this once-a-year tryout event.

Each participant will be asked to perform a series of five 'basic baseball skill tasks', that include hitting, running, throwing/pitching as well as fielding fly and ground balls. Everyone will be scored on a 1-5 point basis in each of the noted areas of performance.

Three coaches representing each of the existing six major league teams (18 total) will perform the evaluation exercise. Each of the major league teams three scores will be consolidated with the other five teams average score in order to obtain a participants 'total' score.

The quantity of departing 1999 12 year olds, plus relocation and other circumstances will be the basis for determining the abundance of opening in the major league for this upcoming 2000 season.

Shortly after the conclusion of the tryout program, CYBA managers and coaches will meet to select those ballplayers who, by virtue of their attained score, complemented by the quantity of league openings, are eligible to be 'drafted'.

These tryouts are only for 10, 11 and 12 year olds who conform to the Little League age requirements and birth year (Aug. 1-July 31). All those who are eligible should plan to attend, as this is the only opportunity to tryout.

Applications are available at Town Hall or can be completed upon arrival at Barnes Field. Participants are requested to arrive at 1:30 to facilitate the registration process.

There is no money required for this exercise but each participant should bring a baseball glove, hat and long pants. Rubber 'cleated' footwear is optional. No other 'attire/equipment' is required.

All candidates will receive notification from the CYBA within 5 days following the tryouts. Parents are welcome to watch this event which generally is expected to last approximately 90 minutes (3:30 p.m.). Rain date is Sunday Sept. 19 at 2:p.m.

Any questions regarding these tryouts may be forwarded to Dan Leahy (383-1005), Mark DeGiacomo (383-6413) or Bob Morgan (383-3265).

Lady Skippers look to contend in SSL jump out at Beal as the two most obvious teams likely to be at the top of the SSL standings at the end of the season.

Hanover graduated several quality players, but Beal expects head coach Garth Nelson's team to be the class of the SSL.

"A pair of shoes leaves [Hanover's] field and a pair steps in," she said of the Lady Indians' strong girls soccer program.

Beal is excited by the prospects for coming seasons as well, thanks to a resurgence in Cohasset's numbers at both the JV and middle school levels. Cohasset is fielding a JV team this season, thanks to a solid freshman class of 15 players. Forty-two seventh- and eighth-grade girls make up the middle school program.

"The numbers are back on the rise," Beal said.

A successful varsity campaign will only help strengthen the growing interest in soccer in Cohasset.

"It's going to be a good season," Beal said.

Cohasset players suit up for Trinity soccer

Cohasset's Brett MacQuarrie is one of the top forwards on the Trinity College men's soccer team. MacQuarrie is a 6'2", 175-pound junior and attended Northfield-Mt. Hermon. Cohasset's Morgan Sandell, a freshman out of Noble & Greenough, is vying for playing time on the front line.

Trinity has high hopes this year as all but six regulars are returning. The team finished the 1998 season with a 9-7-1 record, reaching the finals of the ECAC Division 3 Metro Tournament.

The Bantams, under head coach Eddie Mighten, defeated Vassar College, 3-1, in the opening game and advanced past King's Point on penalty kicks, after two overtimes produced a 3-3 title. Trinity then lost, 1-0, at Coast Guard Academy in the finals.

IT'S HAPPENING

Harvest Supper in Beechwood

A Harvest Supper will be held at Cohasset's Beechwood Congregational Church on Saturday, Sept. 18 at 6:30 p.m.

Ham, green beans, Harvard beets, cole slaw and potatoes will be served. Following dessert, items harvested from local gardens will be sold to benefit the church.

Dinner is $6.99 for adults and $3.50 for children. Seats must be reserved by calling 781-383-9131.

A diamond-studded event at the harbor

Thanks to a generous donation of bevel-set diamond earrings by Cohasset Jewelers, the South Shore Art Center's "Evening On The Harbor" Sept. 25 gala auction is set to be a diamond-studded event. For a $50 donation that evening, guests will receive a chance to win the earrings with the name of the winner being announced during the evening's live auction of one-of-a-kind painted furniture and art objects. All raffle participants will also receive a pair of cubic zirconia earrings as a token of thanks for their participation.

In addition to the diamond raffle and live auction, "Evening On The Harbor" will include a silent auction featuring everything from gift certificates from local businesses and gourmet food and dining packages to week-long vacation stays in private homes. Completing the evening at Atlantica Restaurant will be elegant buffet stations and dancing to the sounds of The Grateful Dads.

Proceeds from "Evening On The Harbor" will benefit the art center's "Arts to Go" and "Looking at Art" educational initiatives. Both programs are designed to enrich children's classroom learning experiences through greater understanding of visual arts.

Reservations for the creative black tie event are $75 per person and may be made by calling the South Shore Art Center at (781) 383-2787.

Chamber hosts get-together

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce will hold a Wine Tasting/Networking Social Get-Together on Tuesday, Sept. 21 from 5:30 to 7:45 p.m. at Bernard's, 107 Ripley Road, Cohasset Village.

There is limited space for the event, which will feature appetizers. Tickets are on sale through Sept. 17 at Atlantic Bagel & Deli, 166 King St. (Route 3A), Cohasset, next to Good Sport and Hancock Paint. The deli is open from 6 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Tickets also are available by calling Dan Belz at 383-1216.

Cost is $15 for members, non-members for $25.

Registration for ASP 2000, Sept. 19

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project will hold an informational meeting for its 13th work camp experience. The meeting will take place on Sunday, Sept. 19, 7:00 to 8:30 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church. There will be a slide show from last year's journey by our 138 volunteers to five counties in West Virginia. Parents and alumni are welcome to come and see the show.

Registration forms and schedules will be distributed and explained. Do note—this is a year-long commitment of fundraising and preparation. The dates for the 2000 trip are tentatively set for June 24 to July 2. Deadline for returning the forms and non-refundable $50 deposit is Oct. 15. The trip is open to anyone in 10th grade or older and any interested adults.

Second Congregational Church to hold picnic on the common

As part of its 175th anniversary celebration, the Second Congregational Church will hold an old-fashioned picnic on the common on Sunday, Sept. 19 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

"We are planning trolley rides around town, a hay ride around the common, an ice cream social, box lunches, and old-time games" said Rev. Gary Ritts. "We want to make it in the style of the older days. Everything is geared toward the 175th anniversary."

The picnic is only one in a series of events leading to the church's birthday celebration on Thanksgiving Sunday, Nov. 21. Among the events scheduled are a sermon by a former minister, Rev. John Benbow, on Oct. 10, and a presentation of an oral history project on Nov. 7.

As for this week's picnic, Ritts said the church is simply hoping for good weather. Luckily, the remnants of Hurricane Floyd should be well past New England by Sunday.

For more information on this Sunday's picnic or any of the church's 175th anniversary events, call the Second Congregational Church at 383-0345.

ENHANCED EMISSIONS & SAFETY TEST
Coming October 1

If you want to know about the upcoming enhanced emissions test, take this simple quiz.

To locate a licensed testing station, or for more information, call toll-free, 1-877-387-8234 or visit http://vehicletest.state.ma.us.

ANSWERS: 1.d. Air pollution will be decreased by 120 tons a day. States with similar emissions testing have seen a 25% decrease in air pollution from vehicles. 2.d. To avoid waiting in line, don't wait until the end of the month to have your vehicle tested. 3.d. When it rains, air pollution returns to earth to become soil and water pollution. 4.a. Because the new emissions test is better and more comprehensive, you only have to take the test every other year. The safety test, however, is still required annually. 5.a. Keep your car properly cared for and the test should be a snap. 6.d. No one in the Commonwealth benefits from air pollution, and it's toughest on our children, the elderly and those who work outdoors.*

State rejects environmental report for CHL expansion

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The state will not require the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill to perform a supplemental environmental impact report (EIR) for its revised Area V expansion plan. Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand rejected the supplemental EIR in a letter dated Sept. 9, 1999.

CHL is seeking permission to build a new landfill in Area V, an unused portion of the now closed facility. CHL cannot build a new landfill or apply for approval from the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) because of the state's current moratorium on new and expanded facilities. In his letter, Durand points out that CHL can apply for the new expansion once the moratorium is lifted after DEP completes an update to its Solid Waste Master Plan.

"The Cohasset Heights Landfill expansion project will be evaluated within the context of the current and any updated Solid Waste Master Plan. Presently, however, the moratorium on any review of permit applications extends to the permitting of the Cohasset Heights Landfill. The moratorium will remain in place until it is officially lifted," Durand wrote in his letter.

Water Commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. works for Clean Water Action, which is monitoring and attempting to influence DEP's Master Plan changes. McNabb said DEP is expected to lift the moratorium in March, 2000.

The new expansion is a modification of CHL's original plan in 1995 to expand the landfill by 14.2 acres. The board of health rejected the original expansion request, and CHL appealed the decision in court. The case was finally decided in the town's favor on July 14, 1999. On July 15, 1999, CHL submitted a modified plan that reduced the maximum daily acceptance rate from 900 tons per day to 299 tons per day. CHL has also eliminated plans for a materials recycling facility (MRF) with a capacity of 300 tons per day, and a materials processing operation (MPO) with a maximum capacity of 100 tons per day.

Durand ruled that the changes in the Area V expansion do not warrant a supplemental EIR, although he pointed out that CHL must comply with state laws that require the landfill to recycle 25 percent of the materials that enter the facility.

McNabb, who is also vice president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) said he is disappointed that Durand is not requiring a supplemental EIR.

"Durand brushed off the changes in the project, and he interpreted the regulations to say that the three years between EIRs didn't apply in this case because time spent in litigation doesn't count."

CHL first proposed the Area V expansion in 1995. Since the board of health rejected the Area V proposal in 1996, it has been in litigation for all but 12 months of the past three years. Despite the possibility of a new landfill rising next to the old landfill, McNabb remains unconvinced that CHL can open another facility at the same location.

"A lot has changed since the original proposal," McNabb said. "There are the bedrock fractures, about 1/3 of the Area V proposal is in the Water Protection District, an expansion in truck traffic caused by landfill material increasing from zero to 299 tons per day, the elimination of the MPO, and a new 45-foot height limit for landfills."

Despite those hurdles, McNabb believes CHL will continue to pursue even a smaller landfill because of the potential to make millions of dollars per year.

CHL site assignment surrender is finalized

It's now official: CHL no longer has a site assignment and the old landfill is closed forever. CHL surrendered its site assignment to the board of health on Wednesday, Sept. 8 at a small meeting. The board of health allowed CHL to relinquish the site assignment and canceled previously planned site assignment hearings. Notice of the rescission was recorded in the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds on Sept. 9, 1999. Members of the health board, SAFE, CHL owner Paul Barry and his attorney Anton Moehrke attended the meeting and signed documents finalizing the rescission.

The town's CHL Negotiating Committee issued a press release stating that the rescission is the first step towards resolving numerous outstanding issues between the town and CHL.

SAFE vice president John K. McNabb Jr. said the next step for the town is to negotiate an acceptable closure plan with CHL. DEP must approve any closure plan, but no one knows when it plans to discuss CHL, McNabb said.

"We have to accomplish three things to resolve the closure issues," McNabb said. "Zero discharge into the watershed, a retention trench around the landfill to catch run-off, an active gas collection and treatment system to gather the methane being produced by the landfill."

CANCER TALK WITH TANIA LINGOS, MD

Reducing the Risk of Esophageal Cancer

It is within our power to reduce the risk of many cancers. Frequently, an unhealthy lifestyle can give rise to cancer. A recent study by the Harvard School of Public Health found that smoking, diet, and lack of exercise caused a majority of deaths from cancer.

Esophageal cancer presents a case in point. The esophagus is the tube that transports food and liquid from the throat to the stomach. In many cases, esophageal cancer, which strikes about 15,000 Americans every year, is related to lifestyle choices.

In particular, the disease is linked to the abuse of tobacco (both smoking and chewing) and the heavy consumption of alcohol. Smokers and drinkers are at risk. Those who abuse both alcohol and tobacco run an increased risk of developing esophageal cancer.

Barrett's condition, that is long-term heartburn or acid reflux, recently has been found to be a risk factor for the disease. Damaging to the esophageal tissue, Barrett's condition is deemed pre-cancerous. It should be monitored closely, and treated aggressively to minimize the risk. If you suffer from chronic heartburn, you should follow-up with your physician.

People who constantly gulp burning-hot beverages are also at risk. The same applies to those who consume large quantities of smoked or salt-cured products. Excessive weight can add to the risk of esophageal cancer.

With these risks identified, we have more ability to prevent esophageal cancer than we might suspect. A change in lifestyle can help to reduce the risk of esophageal and other cancers. To give yourself that edge:

- Do not smoke or chew tobacco.
- If you drink alcohol, do so in moderation.
- Exercise and keep your weight down.
- Stay alert for digestive problems and get proper treatment for them.
- Eat plenty of fruit and vegetables.

Prevention is always preferable to a cure. This is especially so in regard to esophageal cancer. While treatable, the disease is rarely curable. Next week, I will discuss the symptoms of esophageal cancer and some treatment possibilities.

Benefit car wash for Class of 2000

Don't forget to stop by at the Texaco Station in downtown Cohasset this Sunday. From 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., the Class of 2000 will be hosting a car wash to help raise money for their senior prom.

Discussion on breast health

On Tuesday, Sept. 28, at Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers' Residence on Cohasset Harbor at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Suniti Nimbkar will be hosting an informal discussion regarding breast health.

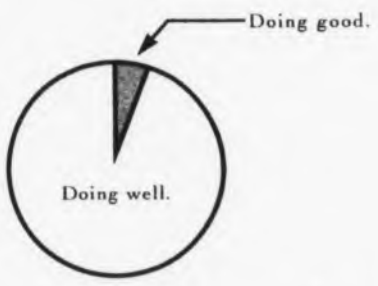
Nimbkar joined Surgical Specialist Inc. in 1993. She is a graduate of Boston University Medical School and trained at the University Hospital. Nimbkar is Board certified in general surgery, and she was one of the first surgeons at South Shore Hospital to perform sentinel lymph node biopsies.

The program is sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health. It is free of charge and open to the general public. Light refreshments will be served.

In conjunction with Breast Cancer Awareness Month in October, Mobile Diagnostics Inc. will bring its mammography van to Cohasset Town Hall parking lot on Saturday, Oct. 9 from 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

For more information or to make an appointment, please call the League office at 781-383-0771.

Once people realize how much time our employees donate to community service, the phrase 'bankers hours' takes on a whole new meaning.



At BankBoston, we feel strongly that there's more to our purpose than just serving a community's financial needs. That's why we created Eagle Corps, a volunteer program that allows our employees to donate their time, expertise and tireless efforts to a number of different community programs. From helping clean New England's coastline and tutoring young students, to stocking local food pantries and delivering holiday gifts, Eagle Corps will continue dedicating its efforts to enriching the lives of those who need it the most, in the New England communities that need it most. This is your time. Yard sale benefits Flutie foundation for autism

One family's struggle inspires neighbors to help

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

When thinking about neighborhoods, there are a few things that almost automatically come to mind. Whether it be children playing together on the street or summertime cookouts, these events bring neighbors closer together and make them something more than people who simply happen to live near one another.

Unfortunately, not all of the events in people's lives are so carefree. The bonds forged by neighbors during times of relative ease often cause them to support one another when life becomes more difficult. Such is the case for Lorraine Tarpey, 18 Bancroft Way, whose neighbors came together to help throw a yard sale last Saturday to raise money for the Doug Flutie Jr. Foundation for Autism on behalf of her four year-old son, Brendan, who is autistic.

"Our friends and family have been fantastic," Tarpey said. "I can't tell you how many people have offered us money. The medications can get very expensive and run from $4,000 to $12,000 a year. My friends wanted to help us pay for the medication and that was the reason behind the yard sale. I didn't think that was right but giving the money to the Doug Flutie Foundation was a great alternative."

Saturday's yard sale raised more than $800 for the Flutie Foundation, whose primary mission is to raise money for low-income families who need assistance to care for their autistic children.

As defined by the Autism Society of America, autism is "a developmental disability, the result of a neurological disorder that affects the functioning of the brain in the areas of social interaction and communication skills." The disorder begins at birth or within the first 2-1/2 years of life.

Most autistic children are perfectly normal in appearance, but spend their time engaging in puzzling and disturbing behaviors which are markedly different from other children. They may stare into space for hours, throw uncontrollable tantrums, or show little to no interest in people.

Because autistic children look normal, it is almost impossible for parents to know something is wrong until they can notice signs of slowed development.

"Brendan started walking at nine months and developed pretty normally until he was about a year old," Tarpey said. "My husband and I noticed that he wasn't saying any words yet. We thought he had a problem hearing and we blamed so much on his ears. Later on, I suspected that there was something else. A lot of people don't want to believe it, but, deep down, I knew something was wrong. Finally, I talked to my doctor."

The doctor confirmed her suspicion. She was told that Brendan had a Pervasive Developmental Disorder (PDD), a spectrum of disorders of which autism is a part.

Brendan Tarpey suffers from autism.

"I was so overwhelmed," she said of her emotions upon hearing the news. "When you have a child, you think, 'My child is going to go to Harvard.' On top of that, so many people asked us questions that we didn't have the answers to."

Tarpey said that Brendan's afflictions are consistent with those commonly seen in autistic children, but that early intervention programs have dramatically helped to improve his speech.

"His social skills are off and he his speech is limited," she said. "But we know he could be so much worse, the spectrum of PDD is huge. We had him in early intervention until age three and he learned how to use a spoon and worked on his speech and social skills. Now he goes to the South Shore Education Collaborative at Osgood and he knows about 100 words. Before I would say 'Get the Ball,' and he'd just give me a blank stare. Now he can actually get the ball. What he learns, we take great joy in."

The fact that Brendan looks like any other child has been both a blessing

BATHROOM VENTILATION

Proper ventilation enables bathrooms to sidestep the fogged mirrors, mildew and peeling paint that are the outward manifestations of high humidity. Inside walls, unchecked humidity can lead to joist and framing deterioration, which can lead to structural concerns. These problems can all be avoided with an exhaust fan that vents to the outside of the house. The Home Ventilating Institute recommends installing a fan that changes the bathroom air eight times per hour. To calculate the CFM (cubic feet per minute) rating, multiply the length and width of the room by 1.1. Thus, according to this formula, the typical 6x8 foot bathroom would require a fan with a rating of at least 53 CFM.

A ventilation system can absorb humidity from a bathroom and protect the room's paint and wallpaper. A bathroom can be a beautiful oasis to retreat to at the end of a long day. THE DESIGNING WOMAN remains on the forefront of interior design techniques and can provide you with detailed recommendations on how to improve any room in your home. Our services include creating a design plan, scheduling deliveries and supervising and coordinating the work of craftsmen. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a consultation.

HINT: Many bathroom ventilation units feature variable speed fans, automatic shutoffs, and/or heaters.

and a curse for Tarpey. It is a blessing in that other children play freely with Brendan, though they may not understand why he doesn't talk to them. But it has also been difficult for her when Brendan throws a tantrum and people think she has a spoiled brat on her hands.

"I get some hairy eyeballs," she said. "In the barber shop, I had a guy who came up to me and said 'I came here for some relaxation and your kid ruined it.' Those kind of things are tough because people don't know what Brendan has. You can't blame them, though, because you'd never be able to tell by looking at him.

"If we're at the beach, he might take a toy from another child, and then I have to go over and get into the spiel. There are times when he does try to interact with the other kids, but he basically plays by himself."

Explaining that fact to her six year-old son, Colin, has been a difficult task. Playing with one's little brother is a natural desire for any young child, but Tarpey said she and her husband have done their best to explain Brendan's situation in a way which Colin can understand.

"He doesn't understand why Brendan doesn't talk like the other kids," she said. "We just tell him that God makes all kinds of people."

Tarpey said one of the hardest parts about raising autistic children is that they have to be supervised constantly.

"Autistic children don't pick up on the fears that parents try to instill into them," she said. "They aren't afraid. A couple of times, Brendan has taken off of the property. We have to know where he is at all times because he has no concept of fear. He'd get in anyone's car and not think anything of it."

The constant supervision of Brendan has bothered Colin at times, but Tarpey said she and her husband do the best they can to make things as normal as possible for Colin.

Yard sale committee members include (standing) Leila Hill, Lorraine Tarpey and Adrienne MacCarthy; (seated) Becky Murphy and Sandy Cough.

"Colin feels slighted at times, especially when we let behavior slide from Brendan that we wouldn't with him," she said. "We make sure that both of the boys are included in everything we do."

Indeed, Colin was present at the yard sale, playing with friends, while Brendan played by himself for the most part. Tarpey was glad that the event raised money for such a worthy cause as the Doug Flutie Jr. Foundation for Autism. She admits, however, that she was not always the biggest fan of the former Boston College quarterback.

"Doug Flutie and I are the same age and so when I was in college, everything was Doug Flutie this and Doug Flutie that," she said. "I didn't want to hear one more Doug Flutie story. When my husband read about his foundation, he told me I better rethink my position. After watching the things that he does, I definitely changed my thinking. A lot of famous people give to charities to get some publicity. He'll give bicycles to schools and you'd never know about it."

His charitable foundation hopes to raise enough money to fund significant research about the causes of autism. Though the causes are poorly understood, it is known that children with autism get better over time. Tarpey said Brendan is living proof of that fact.

"He has made great progress, and we have been very fortunate to have such a wonderful school system," she said. "Our goal is to have him go to kindergarten with regular kids."

Police made 15 arrests in August

August was a moderately quiet summer month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 15 arrests during the month. Five arrests were for minors transporting alcohol, two were for warrants and three were for assault & battery. Of those, one involved assault and battery on a police officer. There were two protective custody arrests during August. There was one arrest apiece for open and gross lewdness, public drinking and, finally, operating under the influence, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

There were no breaking and enterings reported during August.

During August the Emergency Dispatch Center received 670 calls for service. Of those, 125 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

During the month, the department issued 131 motor vehicle citations for fines totaling $6,215. Additionally, during August the department issued 196 parking tickets for a total of $4,080.

The department is winding down its marine patrols, which have been a great success this summer. There were several responses to vessels in distress, including towing disabled boats and many enforcement issues. Our bike patrols, however, are still in force and will hopefully be utilized late into the fall if weather permits, Noonan said.

Road Closures for week of Sept. 13

Ridge Top Road is open, but is scheduled to be paved on Thursday.

Smith Place is closed from Cushing Road to end.

King Street between North Main Street to Route 3A will be closed starting the week of Oct. 20. Buses and emergency vehicles will have limited access.

Reservoir Road from Pleasant Street to Clay Spring Road.

Norfolk Road from Bancroft Road to Cushing Road.

Bancroft Road from Pond Street to Bancroft Way.

Elm Street at Border Street is closed to through traffic. Use Summer Street to access Border Street and Elm Street up to Global Travel.

Clay Spring Road at Arrowwood Road.

Jerusalem Road will have construction on different areas for an undetermined length of time. Delays are possible.

For latest street closures check the police website at www.cohassetpd.org

D & A drug hotline

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee operates a Drug and Alcohol Information and Referral Hotline on Tuesdays. Persons needing help with a drug or alcohol problem may call 383-4120. All calls are confidential, and staffed by a trained drug and alcoholism counselor on Tuesdays between 6 and 10 p.m.. On other days and at other times callers may leave a message.

Town landmark getting a facelift

Independence Building being restored

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A new cupola sits atop the proud, old building, a sign of new life for the tired-looking structure. Though its future use as a single-family residence will be a far cry from its former tours of duty as a fire station, police station, law office, teen center, and gown museum, the new owner of the Independence Building is restoring the town landmark to its past glory.

As rooted in town history as almost any other town building, the structure is built into the ledge just below St. Stephen's Episcopal Church on South Main Street

"I wanted to return the building to its previous character," said owner Thomas J. Koncius, who also owns the real estate appraisal and consulting firm Atlantic Valuations Group in Cohasset Village. "I'd always admired the Independence Building and thought it was a shame to see it looking so dilapidated."

Koncius said it would take about two months to complete the repairs necessary to transform the building into a residence. He plans to rent out the residence once the renovations are finished.

"It's not as much work as it seems," he said as he negotiated his way around ladders, tarps, and various other construction equipment. "We have to put in the kitchen and

Dredging nearly done

Work should be completed by January

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Good things come to those who wait, and town officials and boat owners are excited that the $1.3 million dredging of Cohasset Harbor is set to be completed by January.

The project was to be completed by last January, but equipment problems and weather delays necessitated a hiatus. Work is set to resume on Nov.1, and with very little left to be done, the project should be finished within two months.

It is imperative that the work be done by January to avoid the same weather delays which plagued the project last year and to avoid disturbing certain migratory fish populations. Harbormaster John Winters said finishing the dredging by January should not be a problem.

"Most of the work has already been done," he said. "They [Burnham Associates of Salem, the company hired by the town to perform the dredging] have already dredged the Cove, Bailey's Creek, and the channel. All that's left is the area outside the Yacht Club and the breakwater side of Bassings Beach."

Boats and moorings will have to be removed from the Yacht Club and Bassings Beach by Oct. 15. Winters said that boat owners have already been notified.

Town Manager Mark Haddad is pleased that the dredging of Cohas-

All eyes are on senate seat

Hedlund prepares for mayoral showdown

By Jeanne M. Rideout
STAFF WRITER

The South Shore's state senator is now one of two finalist vying for the Weymouth mayoral seat.

Republican Robert Hedlund won enough votes in Tuesday's primary to duke it out in the mayor's race — which will be decided by voters in November. He faces off against Weymouth Fire Chief Dave Madden

Tuesday's vote narrowed the field from nine to two and has political insiders wondering what could possibly play out if Hedlund wins in November. A number of candidates have already expressed an interest in running for Hedlund's senate seat, should he win in Weymouth. Among the possible candidates for state senate are: Democrats — Timothy White of Hingham, Philip Edmundson of Hingham, former Marshfield selectman and current Weymouth resident James Cantwell and Ted LeClair of Marshfield. Hingham selectman Martin Crane, a Republican, has also expressed interest in running for Hedlund's senate seat.

The seven-year state senator, who lost the top voting spot to Madden by about 500 votes, celebrated Tuesday's victory with the three of the most important women in his life, his mother Joanne, his sister Heather, and his little

Correction is noted

Captain Dan Ferrara of the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office was incorrectly identified in last week's Cohasset Mariner as a member of the Dedham police department. The Mariner regrets the error.

Town requests Cunningham Bridge survey

Town Manager Mark Haddad sent a letter to the Norfolk County Engineering Department last Wednesday to request a topographic study near 215 Atlantic Ave.

The survey will determine the road layout on Atlantic Avenue for the purposes of installing two parking spots at the location near Cunningham Bridge.

At their last meeting, selectmen requested the survey when they could not decide whether the parking spaces would present a danger to town residents.

School committee to meet Monday

The school committee will meet on Monday night, Sept. 27, at 7:30 p.m. in the Cohasset Middle High School library. To check the agenda for the meeting, call the Superintendent's office at 383-6111.

Funds borrowed for sewer project

Selectmen voted Monday night to borrow $3,500,000 from the Massachusetts Water Pollution Abatement Trust for construction of sewers and other water pollution control facilities.

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the trust is a state agency that provides money for sewer and other projects to control water pollution. The town will pay back the money over 20 years, without interest.

The vote of the selectmen was required before the town treasurer could borrow the money from the trust.

Joe Buckley steps down as treasurer/collector

Will likely volunteer again with seniors

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The ink was barely dry on Joesph Buckley's resignation letter when South Shore Elder Services gave him a ring.

The regional agency wanted the 76-year-old back on its board of directors.

Buckley, who stepped down last week as treasurer/collector after 3-1/2 years in the post, said yes.

But to those who know him, that's no surprise. Buckley has spent countless hours over the years volunteering quietly behind the scenes where and when he could.

Buckley, who was "roasted" at a luncheon Monday by his friends at the Cohasset Council of Elder Affairs, was elected treasurer/collector in 1996. He filled the vacancy created by long-time treasurer/collector Betty Ripley who took a position in Marshfield.

He ran on a platform supporting the move to an appointed treasurer/collector, a change that town meeting approved that spring. Buckley still thinks it was a good move for the town.

"The position should be appointed," Buckley said. "The town is a big business." For example over the years, Buckley has managed millions of dollars in sewer and school loans.

"His are big shoes to replace. Joe's done a good job and we'll miss him terribly but he has volunteered to stay in touch as a resource which we appreciate."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Joseph DiVito, Jr., who served as assistant assessor appraiser in town in the early 90s, was hired as Buckley's replacement.

The Linden Drive resident thinks DeVito, town accountant Michael Buckley, and town manager Mark Haddad — who are all in their early to mid-30s — will make a good team.

"It's great to have three young people like that. I think they'll do a good job," he said.

Haddad said Buckley will be missed.

"His are big shoes to replace," Haddad said. "Joe's done a good job and we'll miss him terribly but he has volunteered to stay in touch as a resource which we appreciate."

Buckley said the accomplishments he's proudest of during his tenure as treasurer/collector include computerization of the office and making "a few bucks" for the town through the investment of surplus moneys.

Anna Abbruzzese, chairman of the Council of Elder Affairs, said the CEA presented Buckley with a Donna Green print of the common which shows the town hall in the background. She said the event also featured a clever story in rhyme by Buckley's nephew and a proclamation in Buckley's honor presented by Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown.

"He's been everything to so many people," Abbruzzese said. "It's hard to imagine how we will function without him.

"But we know he is just a phone call away if we really did need him."

Buckley was well suited to the task of treasurer. He was employed for 45 years by the Buckley Corporation, 35 years the chief financial officer. He served on the Cohasset Advisory Committee; four years as CEA treasurer; and seven years as a SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders) counselor.

It was his tireless work behind the scenes as a SHINE counselor helping the town's senior citizens wade through the paper work to access health insurance benefits that led to his selection as the 1994 Cohasset Citizen of the Year.

Buckley sees himself helping young retirees with healthcare choices.

"I would prefer working one-on-one helping people," he said. "People 65, unlike those who are 85 and over, who are retiring don't know what to do, whether they should go on Medicare or not. There's a vacuum on younger people."

That's a role that Abbruzzese sees Buckley taking on sooner rather than later.

"Joe has such a love of people," she said. "It won't be long before he's back advising seniors and working for the elderly."

But at least in the short term, Buckley is going to take some time to slow down a bit.

"So far it feels great," he said about not having to go into work. "I just got home from the beach. I think I'm going to enjoy it."

Joe Buckley of Linden Dr. stepped down after 3-1/2 years as treasurer. The 76-year-old Linden Drive resident was selected as the 1994 Cohasset Citizen of the Year for his volunteerism in town, a role he will likely resume now that he has more free time.

Cohasset Teen Center hopes for a paid director

Need to get money appropriated in town budget

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

If you build it, they will come. That is the message that those involved in covering the DPW garage into the new teen center would like those in town to hear. The fact that the teens will come begs a couple of questions. What happens when they get there? Will there be someone around to work with the kids, to teach them, and to listen to their problems?

Those intimately involved with the teen center say such a person is an absolute necessity if the teen center garage is to become a viable part of the community.

"The fact is that when kids come to the center, they are being worked with, directed, and being taught," said Jen Lagrotteria, who served for six months last year as director at the old teen center in the Independence Building. "I grew up in this town and I know that these kids need someone who will be there for them. You need someone whose first priority is those kids."

Recreation director Jack Worley, who doubles as chairman of the youth resources committee [YRC], which is spearheading the teen center project, said that the teens in the center need supervision.

"You simply can't depend 100 percent on volunteers."
—Jack Worley, recreation director

"You simply can't depend 100 percent on volunteers," he said. "If we try to use parents to staff the center, the kids don't go. We'll try to get by with a part-time individual and myself. I'll do the administrative part for them but we need someone to be in charge of the operation of the facility and getting events together."

Worley said the YRC would like to see $15,000 appropriated for a teen center director at the Special Town Meeting on Dec. 6.

"On a part-time basis, I'm thinking $15,000 would be the minimum amount that we could get by with," he said. "It would work out to about $12.00 an hour."

That $15,000 was in the town budget two years ago, but it was cut last year as a result of the budget squeeze which affected a number of town organizations. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he will propose bringing the motion to the Special Town Meeting in December.

"The teen center garage is due to be finished in October and if the YRC feels that a director is necessary to operate it, then I'll support it before the Board of Selectmen," Haddad said. "I'd like to bring it before the town as a separate warrant article, so it can stand on its own. With all of the volunteer hours that have gone into constructing it, it would be a shame to not be able to staff it."

Lagrotteria said the new garage is far more conducive to use as the teen center than was the Independence Building, which had far less room to offer the kids.

"The garage is going to be fantastic," she said. "In the Independence Building, there was never enough room and there was mold on the walls. We'd get 25 kids in there and it would be really cramped."

Although the Independence Building was not an ideal home for the teen center, Lagrotteria said that the fact that so many kids came anyway proves that it serves an important purpose in town.

"It was so great," she said of her time as the teen center director. "The kids would mainly just sit and talk in the TV room, or they'd play poker with pennies or Skittles. We had a foosball table, a basketball hoop, and a pool table, though the kids mainly just sat on it. With the extra room in the garage, it's going to be something wonderful."

Prior to July 1998, when the youth resources committee was created by combining the teen center financial accounts and the teen center administrative board, the teen center was privately financed.

When it was a private entity, Worley said the teen center put a good deal of money into the Independence Building, making improvements that allowed the building to be sold by the town in June for $100,100. Though he knows that some of that money cannot be directly appropriated to the teen center, he hopes that selectmen will remember their contribution and support the $15,000 budget initiative for a director.

"I know they couldn't give us any money from the sale of the Independence Building, but maybe they can help us to staff the teen center," he said.

Haddad said he appreciates the work that those involved with the teen center put into the Independence Building, but added that state laws prohibit that money from funding a director for the center.

"The money from the sale of the building has to be used for capital items and cannot be used for salaries," he said. "I understand where Jack is coming from, but state laws don't allow it."

It seems, then, that for a teen center director to become a reality, the town will have to vote to appropriate the $15,000 for a teen center director at the Special Town Meeting.

Worley said that the future viability of the teen center is virtually dependent on the success of such an initiative.

"Just paying for the utilities are a problem, but supervision is another thing entirely," he said. "Eventually, you hit the point of diminishing returns."

Lagrotteria said the teens of Cohasset deserve to have a place where they can go and let loose.

"The kids are 13, 14 years old and they're rambunctious and loud, but they should be rambunctious and loud," she said. "If the worst thing we have to deal with is that the kids are loud, then we have some great kids."

Finding a place for those kids to go is not just a problem in Cohasset, but also in a number of towns, because funding for teen centers can be tough to come by.

"Often, towns just don't give a big financial commitment to that age group," Worley said.

Lagrotteria is confident that Worley's involvement with the teen center project ensures its eventual success within the community.

"Mr. Worley is amazing," she said. "The kids know him and he does so much for them. He makes everything happen."

Town landmark is getting a facelift

do the plumbing, but I think we can get it done in two months."

Two jail cells, remnants of the building's days as the town police station, will remain on the first floor to preserve the history of the town landmark.

"I think they'll make a great pantry," Koncius said of their location next to the proposed L-shaped kitchen.

In addition to the new, custom-made cupola, whose light will shine brightly at night, Koncius has other plans that will make the building look much like it did 150 years ago.

"We're going to put on heavy, historic black shutters and use the same white cedar clapboards that were used originally," he said. "Noel Collins, who operated his law offices here, had an 'Independence Building' sign that used to be on the building. He's getting it restored and we're going to put that up as well."

The 150-year old building got its name from its first use as home to Independence Fire Company No. 1, which housed the town's first, hand-pumped fire engine.

The building was converted into the town's first police station in 1913, when the fire department moved to another part of town.

"In 1913, the town built its first Central Fire Station down at the Cove where Veterans Park is today," explained historical society curator David Wadsworth. "By that time, the Independence 1 was probably not very active, since water pressure in the public water system hydrants became available. That's when it was converted into the town's first police station, where its headquarters remained until the town opened a joint police and fire department in 1962."

While home to some very serious business in its days as the police station, the building was home to some carousing in those days as well, as evidenced by the Prohibition-era "hooch" bottles which Collins found there in the late 1980's as he was putting down flooring.

Some of the building's long history can be seen throughout town. The Prohibition-era "hooch" bottles are property of the historical society and the Independence Fire Bell, which hung in the former cupola, now sits on Government Island.

Prior to Koncius' winning bid for the property, Town Manager Mark Haddad had proposed razing the building because of its continued vacancy. Selectmen objected due to its storied past and its status as a town landmark.

Koncius, a former Cohasset resident now living in Scituate, bought the building from the town in June after posting a bid of $100,100. His bid was the highest the town received, coming in $2,100 higher than that of Kelly Kalus of Clay Strokes, who bid $98,000.

Though the property is zoned in the downtown business district, the zoning board of appeals granted Koncius a variance, allowing him to make the building a single-family residence. He said the building is far more conducive to that use than it would be as a commercial location.

"The building is very vertical, and it lends itself to a town house-type setup more than it would an office kind of setting," he said. "Also, there's really not adequate parking for a business and there's very little space out front before you hit the street."

To allow parking for prospective tenants, Koncius is in negotiations with St. Stephen's to work out an easement for a couple of spaces.

He said his decision to rent out the Independence Building had a lot to do with what the dearth of available rentals in Cohasset.

"In my business, I'm constantly talking to people who are looking for apartments to rent," he said. "There's just not very much in town in the way of rentals."

Seniors discuss housing options at forum

Strong sentiment for a zoning bylaw change

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

How can seniors stay in Cohasset? That was the focus of the housing issues forum which was held at Cohasset Elder Affairs last week. While no definitive answers could be given to that difficult question in the course of one afternoon, what became apparent was the town will need to come up with creative housing solutions for seniors.

"The ultimate point that came out at the meeting is that no one thing is going to be the answer," said Barbara Anglin, co-chairman of the elder affairs housing committee. "We went over anything and everything that could be done."

Approximately 40 seniors attended the housing forum, which was preceded by a luncheon. Anglin said that one issue which is causing a problem for a number of seniors was trying to maintain a single-family home as their bodies grow more fragile.

"People talked about their problems and concerns about the maintenance of their homes," she said. "Obviously, doing maintenance work can be difficult for older people, but a number of people said they were having trouble arranging for help to maintain their homes as well. They don't know who to call."

Anglin said that in addition to talking about modifications which would make houses more livable as people age, the discussion often centered upon the possibility of Cohasset adopting an accessory dwelling bylaw. Such a bylaw exists in Scituate, allowing seniors to create an apartment within their homes. They may either move in to the smaller apartment and rent out the rest of the house or rent out the smaller apartment. Either way, seniors could get extra money and assistance in maintaining the property.

"Sharing of a home with another senior was brought up as well," said Anglin. "There was strong sentiment for some kind of zoning change that will allow seniors to stay in their homes."

One such bylaw change was enacted at the last town meeting. Dorothy Keville, 6 Stockbridge St., started a citizen petition to create a new bylaw which would allow citizens to rent out one or two rooms in their houses as a Bed and Breakfast. The extra income could allow some seniors to stay in their homes.

"Seniors aren't going to be around forever. That's why they call us seniors."
- SARAH MARMO, 51 SMITH PLACE

Though the Bed and Breakfast bylaw seems to be one creative solution to the senior housing problem, Keville said that getting it passed was no easy task.

"The bylaw change had to get a 2/3 majority at town meeting and succeeded by nine votes," she said.

Anglin said many seniors are still upset the old Osgood school is slated to become the new town library, though the town has not approved that use at town meeting.

"The whole room grumbled with consensus when someone brought up the idea that the town should re-think the reuse of the Osgood school," she said.

Even if the old Osgood school is used for the library, Anglin said that other town groups will eventually want to move to a new building. She would like to see a master plan for the use of the town's buildings, of which senior housing would be a part.

"Eventually there will be surplus buildings," she said. "If the library moves to Osgood, then that building opens up. If the historical society wants to move into the old library, then their building would open up. There's been talk about moving Town Hall. The only way to know where to put a senior housing complex is to have a master plan, but we can't have a master plan without the big picture."

At the end of the meeting, a group of 12 seniors filled out a pilot survey. The housing committee will tabulate the results of that survey at its last meeting on Sept. 24. By that time, the housing committee will also have a proposal from UMass-Boston, who has offered to do a professional senior housing study for approximately $5,000.

"We'll package everything after that Sept. 24 meeting and bring it before selectmen," Anglin said.

One of the seniors at the housing forum, Sarah Marmo, 51 Smith Place, expressed frustration that the town is still discussing possibilities for senior housing rather than finding solutions.

"Seniors aren't going to be around forever," she said. "That's why they call us seniors."

Tim White mulls over run for Hedlund's senate seat

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Timothy H. White of Berkley Circle is the second Hingham resident and fourth local democrat so far to test the waters for a run at state Sen. Robert Hedlund's seat.

White announced Monday that he is forming an exploratory committee which will meet for the first time this week to discuss his possible candidacy.

The 46-old Weymouth lawyer joins Philip Edmundson of Cottage Street, former Marshfield selectman James Cantwell, now of Weymouth, and Ted LeClair, a Marshfield resident and cranberry farmer, as likely rivals for their party's nomination for the Plymouth-Norfolk seat that stretches from Weymouth to Duxbury.

Hedlund, a Weymouth republican with Hingham roots, will surrender his seat if he wins the Weymouth mayoral race in January.

"This could be a lot of fun," said White who ran for the seat in 1992 but lost the nomination in a three-way primary with Chartis Langmaid of Cohasset and Brian McDonald of Weymouth. McDonald went on to unseat Hedlund who won the seat back from McDonald in 1994.

White said he has had a long-time interest in politics as evidenced by his four years as chairman and four years as vice chairman of the Hingham Democratic Town Committee. He is also the former chairman of COOP 8, a coalition of eight democratic town committees on the South Shore.

"I love getting out, talking to people and finding out what their concerns are," he said. "That's why I became an attorney, I love helping people."

White said he feels strongly that Hedlund cannot accomplish much for the district given his position as a republican senator in Massachusetts.

"Just look next door at what Paul Haley has accomplished for Weymouth," he said. Haley is the chairman of the House Ways & Means Committee. White pointed to Haley's efforts in getting money to save Quincy Hospital, which draws from Weymouth and Hingham among other communities, as an example of Haley's effectiveness.

White said that at the top of his priority list is education. He has supported the Education Reform Act since its inception in 1993 but thinks the state should hold off approving any more charter schools until legislators have the chance to fully assess their benefits.

A former Scituate resident, White said he moved to Hingham about 10 years ago because it was closer to Walpole where he grew up in a family of eight children.

"Moving to Hingham put me 20 minutes closer to home," he said.

White said if he decides to run, he looks forward to the campaign and challenge presented by fellow Hingham resident, Edmundson, who is 41.

"Phil will be a terrific candidate, a formidable opponent," White said.

White, who earned his bachelor's degree at Boston College, graduated from the New England School of Law. He serves on the Hingham Long-Range Waste Planning Committee and has coached youth basketball, soccer and softball. He served as special counsel to the Joint Legislative Committee on Taxation in the Mass. General Court.

Hingham selectman Martin Crane, M.D., a republican, is also considering a run for either Hedlund's seat, if Hedlund should win the mayoral race, or for state representative if incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, decides not to seek another term.

Cantwell, 32, an aide to Congressman William Delahunt and a former Norfolk County assistant district attorney, is also a potential candidate. He is a friend of White's.

"Tim has been a good friend for a number of years " Cantwell said. "His candidacy will add to a substantial debate on the issues for how we can improve the quality of life on the South Shore. I look forward to a spirited campaign."

Tim White

LeClair, 30, a Scituate native, lives in Marshfield. He is founder and president of LeClair Brothers Cranberry Co., is part owner and vice president of Webster Cranberry Co., and is a former Navy officer.

LeClair isn't deterred by the competition.

"I'm definitely running," he said Tuesday. "I think all the interest is good for the process."

Hedlund prepares for mayoral showdown

18-month old niece Julia, who sported Hedlund for Mayor flags like a pro.

Hedlund believes he may also have had a little help from a more distant family member.

"I'm was hoping for help from the great beyond," Hedlund said.

Charles A. Ross, Hedlund's grandfather's uncle, was a two-term mayor in Quincy in the late 1940s.

Hedlund said he believes he has the independence to represent everyone in town and the experience to do the job as mayor. If elected mayor in November, his top priorities would be the implementation of the new charter, making it work for all residents, along with instilling confidence in the new town government.

"I would bring a can-do attitude to town hall," Hedlund said. "I would get results on improving our schools, roads, sidewalks, and recreational facilities, while finding a sound, economical solution to our water crisis."

If Hedlund wins, he would have to resign his senate seat because the Weymouth charter does not allow the mayor to hold another elected position. This special election, the timing of which would be determined by Senate president Thomas Birmingham, would be called to determine Hedlund's successor.

Republicans haven't been wasting time when it comes to holding on to the seat. "We're not waiting 15 seconds," Republican James Claypoole of Hingham said when Hedlund officially launched his mayoral campaign this summer. "We're moving ahead by finding out who's interested."

For his part, Hedlund says nothing is a done deal. He knows he has a fight ahead in the coming weeks. He acknowledged earlier this summer that voters may want him to stay right where he is in the senate.

Hedlund's senate career began in 1990. A virtual newcomer at the time, Hedlund defeated Don Hussey of Hingham and Christy Mihos of Cohasset in the '90 Republican primary. He went on to beat state Rep. Robert Ambler of Weymouth for the Plymouth-Norfolk seat.

In 1992 Hedlund lost to Brian McDonald of Weymouth but regained the seat with a win in 1994.

Lock boxes are key to town's fire safety

Fire chief requests that building owners secure them by Oct. 1

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Imagine that a fire started in one of the many churches in town. Hopefully, it would not happen while a service was occurring. Even if the church was virtually vacant, however, irreplaceable momentos would be at risk. The fire department rushes to the scene, but the engine carrying the church's key is out on another call. Firefighters are forced to break the door down, at a cost of precious seconds during which serious damage may occur.

Such a scenario is the reason behind Fire Chief Roger Lincoln's request that some 80 building and business owners pick up their keys from the fire department by Oct. 1 and purchase a lock box, in which they can then place the keys. The type of lock box will be standardized across town, allowing firefighters to access all buildings with lock boxes with one single key.

In a letter sent to those buildings and businesses whose keys are possessed by the fire department, Lincoln wrote that the department is simply in charge of too many keys and needs to ensure that keys can be accessed quickly.

"The number of keys held by this department has become too many, too difficult to secure, and not always available at the scene, should the engine carrying them be at another incident," he wrote.

Interviewed by telephone, Lincoln said that the lock boxes are a necessity because they will allow the department to send any of its vehicles to the scene of a fire and be able to gain quick entry.

"This will allow us to have a key on the property in an easily accessible location," he said. "There will always be a key available to each unit."

All new or substantially renovated businesses in town are required to have the key boxes installed, as a result of a town bylaw which became effective last July 1.

"A lot of other towns have passed the bylaw as well," Lincoln said. "It just makes more sense than carrying around a bunch of keys."

According to fire department captain James Runey, 14 businesses or public buildings in town already have the lock boxes, including Shaw's and Stop and Shop. He said all of the boxes are made by a company called Knox.

"The Knox boxes have the highest degree of security," he said. "They're attack resistant and pick proof. The key cut is unique to Cohasset and cannot be duplicated."

One of the 14 town buildings currently equipped with a key safe is St. Stephen's Episcopal Church on Highland Avenue. Church member Roger Nast installed the box on the front door last year, and said the process was fairly simple.

"It was just a matter of drilling holes in the right places and putting the bolts through," he said. "The box came with fairly simple instructions and it can even be mounted on stone work with anchors."

Nast said that he checked with Lincoln before ordering the box for St. Stephen's to ensure that the church had the right type and to check on where he should put it.

"The fire chief designates what box you use so that one key fits all of the boxes in town," he said. "I checked with him on the location and then we notified the fire department once we had it installed."

The keys which allowed the fire department access to St. Stephen's were formerly held in the call box outside the church. The keys were transferred into the new lock box after the town eliminated fire call boxes.

Nast recollected that the lock box cost between $100 and $200 and said there were a couple of color choices.

"It's a very small box, only about four inches square," Lincoln said. "It looks like a mini-safe and its sturdily built. It can be recessed into the construction of new buildings or mounted on the surface."

Dredging project nearly done

set Harbor, a project which he considers long overdue, will soon become a reality.

"The last time the harbor was dredged was in the early 1960s," he said. "It's really something that should be done every 20 years."

The federal government, which kicked in $1 million of the funding for the dredging project, is reducing the amount of money which it will grant for similar projects. Winters said the town was lucky to get federal money before that window of opportunity closed.

"Federal money is running out for small harbor dredging," he said. "It's exceptional that we're going to get the dredging completed this year. Without funding from the federal government, I don't think you'll see dredging of the harbor again in the next 20 years."

The dredging of the harbor began last September after years of lobbying by town and state officials on Cohasset's behalf.

As a result of those efforts, the Cohasset Navigation Act was passed by Congress in 1996, changing the federal lines of jurisdiction in the harbor and making federal funding possible.

Much of the impetus for the dredging came as a result of the difficulty lobster boats were having trying to maneuver in and out of the harbor.

"The lobster fishermen are the reason we're dredging the harbor," Winters said prior to the project beginning last September. "At low tide, they can't get their boats out."

According to Winters, only 20,000 cubic yards of sediment, mostly silt, remain from the 115,000 cubic yards that were to be removed at the project's inception.

The dredged material is taken to a Massachusetts Bay disposal site 28 miles out to sea. The material is then capped with coarse sand as part of an experiment to determine the effects of underwater capping.

Though the yacht club moorings will be removed somewhat earlier than they have been in previous years, Haddad said town officials resisted efforts of the contractors to begin the dredging in September.

"We wanted people to be able to enjoy their boats for those nice weeks in September," he said. "By October 15, a lot of people are taking their docks down anyway."

DRUM ROLL, PLEASE!

Ladies and gentlemen, may we present (drum roll, please) Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Stephen Donahue! The wedding took place last Saturday (Sept. 11) and it was a special one, indeed! It took place in the bride's backyard (Hap and Leah Pompeo's splendid grounds) and they did not leave a stone unturned (in fact they used beach stones as placecards) — Minot Light was their theme (complete with an ice sculpture) and Sandy Beach was the place where they had all of the wedding photos taken.

The guests ranged in age from three months to 87 years young, and there wasn't one there who didn't dance at least once!

Most importantly, love surrounded the whole grounds! Krissy and Tom beamed, as did the whole family — as they said, they have had a great example set for them by their parents and it was evident! Love was everywhere! And always will be!

Congratulations to one of the loveliest couples we know; here's to love and happiness forever!

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Stephen Donahue on Sandy Beach.

NEW GRANDMOTHER

Have you seen Mary Volpe lately at the Children's Exchange in downtown Cohasset? Did you notice the huge grin that she's sporting? Well, there is a very good reason! Her name is Emma Nicole Viles, born Sept. 9 in Alexandria, Va. — Emma's mom is Mary's youngest daughter, Maria Viles, and you can bet that everyone is ever-so-happy! In fact, Mary is planning on going to Alexandria for the month of October to take care of Mom and Emma; you can bet that there will be tons of kisses and hugs going on there!

Hopefully, Mary will bring back a picture or two for all of us to share!

WRESTLING, A HIT

The tent is gone, the season is over — for most of us! Not for all of the kiddos who went to WWF (that's wrestling, folks), they are still talking about it! Sold out right after the season opened; it was an outstanding night for young and old! Everyone loved it!

Just take a peek at the wrestlers and the kids surrounding them if you don't believe me (a smile is worth a thousand words, right?)

Matt Biladeau, Chris Caron, Kelsie Litchfield and Mike Dooley can attest to the fun they had, and meeting the "stars" was an added treat!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy birthday greetings (belated) go to Pilliani; sure hope your day was a happy one! Come and visit us again real soon!

WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS

Maynard/Wallin

Nathan Maynard, grandson of Herman and Barbara Maynard of King Street and Jack and Mary McCarthy of South Main Street, and his bride, Jane Wallin of New Jersey, celebrated their marriage one warm Saturday afternoon under the McCarthy's big shade trees on the back lawn. This was the second of three receptions held for the young couple after their wedding at the Mormon Temple in Salt Lake City. The bride adorned in a white satin gown and the groom in a black tux looked very handsome as they greeted friends and relatives.

A year before Nathan, then 21, was welcomed home from a two-year mission he had served as a missionary in the Paris, France area. He then resumed his studies in engineering at Tufts University. Jane has been a student at Boston University. The couple met a few months later at a church social in Cambridge. Both have more college to complete. Congratulations and best wishes to the happy couple!

GENEROUS DONATION APPRECIATED

Newbury College (Brookline, Mass.) announced the grand re-opening of the newly renovated Lois and David Weltman Dining Room. Formerly known as the Mitton House Dining Room, improvements to the room were made possible through a generous donation to the culinary arts program at the college by Mr. and Mrs. David Weltman.

The dining room gives the students a chance to practice the craft of food preparation, front and back of the house operations and customer service in a real world environment that prepares them for the workplace

A grand opening gala will be held in mid-October to showcase the improved facility, but we want to extend our admiration to Lois and David Weltman right now — it is so nice when people like you take an avid interest in a college, and make sure that they get nothing but the best! All of us are ever so proud of you!

MARK YOUR CALENDAR

Okay, everyone mark your calendars right now — put a big circle around Oct. 2 and gather up your biggest hugs and kisses. That is the day that Bob Barrow turns 72, can you believe it? A hard worker, an avid gardener, a great friend and a great man — save all of your hugs for that very special day!

ANOTHER GOOD WISH

Happy Birthday, Jen!

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Thanks, Joe

It was about 4-1/2 years ago that we had the privilege of writing our first editorial about Joe Buckley. At the time in February 1995, he had just been named the 1994 Cohasset Citizen of the Year for all his good works with the town's senior citizens.

That was a year before he ran for treasurer/collector on the platform that the position should become an appointed one.

Today, the rest is history. The voters chose Mr. Buckley and town meeting voted to make the treasurer/collector post appointed.

It is easy to forget that Mr. Buckley, who at 76, is a senior himself. But he's never let a little thing like age stand in his way.

After coming out of retirement to work full-time at town hall, Mr. Buckley has earned some well-deserved time off.

Here at the Mariner, we'll miss seeing Mr. Buckley, who always takes a minute to stop in to say hello when we check the selectmen's correspondence every week.

But as Anna Abbruzzese, chairman of the Council on Elder Affairs, points out, he is only a phone call away if someone needs his help or advice.

In the months ahead we won't be at all surprised to see him back at the senior center helping others.

In the meantime, we join all his friends and coworkers in wishing him well and thanking him for a job well done.

Community Guide listings wanted

In just a few short weeks, the Cohasset Mariner along with all of its sister newspapers in the Mariner group, will publish their annual "Community Guide."

In addition to all the names and titles of town officials and how to reach them, there will be a list of community groups, clubs and non-profit organizations for each town.

This is where you can help. Chances are your group, club or organization has a different slate of officers than a year ago. Perhaps the contact person for perspective members has changed or there is a new telephone number. We need to have that information so our community guide is up-to-date and as accurate as possible. So please take a minute and send us a line or two telling us about your organization, along with a contact number where people can reach you. Items may be dropped off at, or mailed to the Cohasset Mariner (in The Hingham Journal building), 73 South St., Hingham or sent by fax to 741-2931. Items must be received by Tuesday, Sept. 28. — Mary Ford

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Elm Street project clarified

TO THE EDITOR:

As chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force, I would like to shed a little fact to the recent letters on the Elm Street Walkway Project. The proposed new walkway would begin at the intersection of Brook Street in the village and continue along the right side of Elm Street to the intersection of Border Street, (in front of Victoria's By the Sea antique shop). The scope of work entails the re-planting of elm trees, installation of a new brick sidewalk, new lighting powered by underground utilities, and yes, a narrowing of the existing road by approximately two feet in a few locations (bike lanes eliminated). The most challenging design element the Task Force is considering for the project is the installation of peninsulas extending into the existing roadway the same distance that cars currently occupy when they park along this side of the street. These peninsulas would create an area to plant the elm trees and give the impression that Elm Street was narrower without actually narrowing the entire road.

The project was conceptualized in an effort to strengthen the link between the harbor recreation areas and the village business district. It is designed to connect the new sidewalk planned in the village with a possible harborwalk, which is in the very early planning stages. The goal of the Elm Street Walkway is to better unify these two beautiful areas of our town. This project alone will not enhance the viability of the village and harbor business districts and is certainly not a top priority for the revitalization program. However, the timing seemed to be right since the area is going to be torn up for the installation of a new outfall pipe for the sewer system. The Task Force believes it makes sense to restore the area in an "enhanced" manner and complete this piece of a much larger complex revitalization puzzle. The Transportation Enhancement Grant program we applied for is designed to provide funding assistance to existing projects in order to enhance the design and benefits. This is one of many proposals the Task Force is working on. In a revitalization program of this magnitude, one has to be flexible and willing to implement opportunities as they become available, not always in order of priority or need.

Let me clarify some misconceptions about the input Cohasset residents and town officials had prior to the submission of the grant application. A five-page informational packet and survey was hand-delivered to all Elm Street residents (with the exception of the Senior Housing complex which I have apologized for omitting on several occasions) and several town officials 33 days prior to the date the grant application was due. The goal was to explain the idea and gauge the response before proceeding with the application. We received seven comments from Elm Street households supporting the project and three opposing. Some town officials expressed reservations about different aspects of the project, however, understanding that this was a preliminary design, (the following officials) ultimately endorsed the grant application: Board of Selectmen, Planning Board, Design Review Board, Department of Public Works, Police Department, Fire Department, Historical Society, Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, Metropolitan Area Planning Council Representative and the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

Now I ask you, based on this support, if you were on the Task Force would you have proceeded with this grant application? Are not these town officials elected and/or appointed to represent the best interests of our residents? Even some of the Task Force members, including myself, have concerns on some of the design elements incorporated into the walkway. However, as we expressed to all we discussed the project with: This is simply in the idea stage, if we are fortunate to be awarded the grant of $229,000, then we will have over a year and a half to hold numerous public meetings in order to develop a design that addresses the needs and concerns of all interested residents. We further reiterated that if a favorable design could not be developed, then we always have the option to give the grant money back. It seemed like a no lose situation to us.

In response to the comment expressed that it was "interesting that the South Shore Chamber of Commerce received the grant denial letter, not our Selectmen," I personally do not see what is so interesting. Everyone who submitted an endorsement letter for the project, including our selectmen, received as a courtesy the same denial letter from the grant originators.

I would like to reassure the 12 households (two from Elm Street) who signed a petition submitted to the Selectmen Aug. 11, that we welcome their input on the project as we have in our previous meetings. Speaking individually, I believe this is a quality project that has a great deal of room for further input and compromise. It seems as though some would rather take the easier route of opposition, than channel their energy to constructively develop a proposal that is in the best interest of all involved.

Beware my fellow Cohasset residents, the Village Revitalization Task Force may be coming to your neighborhood to plant trees, install new sidewalks and lighting, and yes, maybe a few flowers along the way. A scary predicament, (as Elm Street opposition implies); you be the judge.

COHASSET CARES

Young people are avid recyclers

By Allan MacDonald
PUBLICITY CHAIRMAN,
COHASSET RECYCLING COMMITTEE

Back again. In case one or two readers have been wondering, newspaper articles should acknowledge authorship. While these particular columns result from regular Cohasset Recycling Committee meetings, yours truly pulls the notes together and gets them out there. If a bias is detected, it is from my 27 years of teaching various subjects at Cohasset High School. I am proud to represent such an important cause as the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility.

And back to school. Young people can be avid recyclers, being naturally open-minded, sensible, and eager to learn the ways of the world, but so much depends on the attitude of the parents. Kids certainly note what is said at home and especially what is done at home, whether parents treat natural resources with reverence, whether parents value buying new over making do, generally determining what is important in the household. Over the years I've been blessed to work with so many Cohasset kids who showed every sign of careful, thoughtful upbringing. Balanced, curious minds are not accidents. But I do believe it's getting harder and harder to parent. Common sense and basic appreciation are not best taught via TV.

Speaking of which — defunct TV's and computers are recycled now, mandatory as of Jan. 1 [first building on right along with fluorescents, which were mandatory July 1].

Next Paint Day Sat. Sept. 25 [full moon].

Cardboard is still our big money-maker, doubtless because Cohasset residents are being more conscientious with all their cardboard—and remember, brown bags go in the cardboard also!

We can recycle your black plastic flower and shrub pots. First building on right, where the new compost bins are on sale for $25.

Fascinating enough to constitute a series of news columns is the recent word from Scituate—residents are reducing their trash by up to 75% thanks to their new Pay As You Throw/Buck a Bag Program. Wish we could elaborate but out of space. More later. See you next time.

Concerned taxpayers to meet

— OPINION —

(Editor's note: the following is a press release from Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, a grassroots tax watchdog group).

Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers will meet at 7:30 p.m., Wed. Sept. 29 at the Second Congregational Church.

Do you wonder how the school committee after just completing a fiscal year $323,000 deficient can give teachers up to 10 percent raises and administrators up to 7.8 percent raises then claim there is little money for books, supplies and maintenance?

Are you aware that taxpayers are unknowingly subsidizing well over $25,000 of what is supposed to be a self-supporting, non-budgeted babysitting service offered in the schools?

Do you feel we need another new school for the sixth-to-eighth grades, giving us four instead of three buildings to administer? Are you concerned about the huge increase in the fire department overtime budget that is initiating this sudden need to increase the staff?

At an April annual town meeting your town officials told you that they heard your voices, and that in the future they would be looking into structural changes in town government.

Are you wondering in what millennium will that be?

Only you can direct your tax dollars. Join the Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers.

Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers will assist Citizens for Limited Taxation in an effort to roll back state taxes. If you can't attend the meeting but are able to get signatures in Cohasset, call Lee Jenkins at 383-0024 or Tanna Kasperowicz at 383-9115.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on four roll calls from the week of September 13-17. There were no roll calls in the House last week.
PROPERTY AND TRANSFER TAX(S 1988) Senate 35-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill giving local communities two options to raise funds for the preservation of open space and recreation land, renovation of historical buildings and construction of affordable housing. The proposal allows communities to opt to impose up to a one percent tax, to be paid by the seller, on the sale of real estate or to levy up to a 3 percent surtax on all property taxes. The tax would take effect only if approved by a city council or town meeting and ratified by voters at the polls. The bill specifically exempts from either new tax any homeowners who currently receive a property tax abatement or exemption. It also allows communities to exempt from the tax the first $100,000 of a property sale; 50 percent of the property tax; commercial and industrial property and property owned by low income taxpayers including seniors. Supporters said this pro-environment bill simply gives communities and its voters the right to impose a tax to preserve open space and historical buildings and build affordable housing. They noted communities, despite state and federal grants, do not have adequate funds to meet these objectives. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y
ELIMINATE TRANSFER TAX(S 1988) Senate 23-9, rejected an amendment eliminating the option for local communities to impose up to a one percent tax on the sale of realestate. Amendment supporters said it is unfair to have a small group of homesellers fund environmental projects which benefit the entire community. They said the other option of up to a three percent surcharge on all property taxes is fairer and spreads the tax burden among more people. Amendment opponents said voters in local communities, not the legislature, should decide which, if any, tax they want to impose. (A "Yea" vote is for eliminating the one percent tax option. A "Nay" vote is against eliminating it and favors the one percent tax option).	Y
COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY(S 1988) Senate 26-8, rejected an amendment eliminating the option for local communities to exempt commercial and industrial property from the one percent tax on real estate sales or the three percent surcharge on all property taxes. Amendment supporters said commercial and industrial property owners should be required to share the costs of environmental projects which benefit them as well as homeowners. Amendment opponents said these business property owners are already heavily taxed and argued local communities, not the legislature, should decide who will be suject to these new taxes. (A "Yea" vote is for eliminating the option of local communities to exempt commercial and industrial property from any new tax. A "Nay" vote is against eliminating it and favors the exemption option).	Y
$50 MILLION ROADS VETO(S 1945) Senate 31-4, overrode and sent to the House for action, Governor Cellucci's veto of an additional $50 million in borrowing to provide state aid to local communities for road and bridge projects. The legislature authorized $150 million for these local projects but the governor vetoed $50 million and reduced funding to $100 million. Override supporters said cities and towns are depending on this money and noted that without it, deteriorating roads and bridges will become a danger to the public. Override opponents said the $50 million should be funded through regular operating costs and noted borrowing is more expensive, violates the state's $1 billion borrowing cap and will endanger the state's credit rating. They noted an override will force the governor to cut $50 million from other projects on state-owned roads in local communities. (A "Yea" vote is for the additional $50 million. A "Nay" vote is against it).	Y

The 'dangerous' game of soccer

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, we used to play baseball in a vacant lot off Cedarcliff Road, sometimes from dawn to dusk, with black taped balls and flat stones for bases. It was called "sandlot baseball."

The lot is a housing development known as Cape Cod Lane now and the games are organized by adults who dress their young athletes up in real uniforms and refuse to let them play beyond six innings. They call it "little league."

But I digress...

We sandlotters suffered the usual childhood athletic injuries — a cut here, a bruise there, occasionally a broken nose or sprained ankle. I can recall one of the Levangies losing a tooth to a ground ball that didn't bounce the way he expected.

One of us young athletes — let's call him Ralph because that's not his name — used to play the outfield in a catcher's mask. His mother insisted on it. There would be no swollen lips or bloody noses for her son from errant fly balls.

Soccer accounts for 6.2 % of the head injuries in girls and 5.7 percent in boys.

John Powell, Michigan State researcher.

Ralph never amounted to anything as a baseball player. As a matter of fact, neither did I but in my case it was attributed to lack of talent rather than protective face and head gear.

How many mothers have steered their prospective Drew Bledsoes or Ty Laws into soccer because it is less violent and therefore safer than football? You've heard of soccer moms. Ever hear of a football mom?

But the Journal of the American Medical Association reported the other day that soccer players scored lower on tests of memory and planning that did athletes in other sports.

Soccer accounts for 6.2 percent of the head injuries in girls and 5.7 percent in boys, says John Powell, a Michigan State researcher. Let's see Gloria Steinem or Catherine McKinnon make something out of that.

The culprit, theorized JAMA, is the age-old soccer practice of "heading," the art of passing the ball to a teammate by bouncing it off your head, since you are forbidden to touch it with your hands.

This can cause a concussion and, as anyone knows, too many concussions can bring on vacant stare on the faces of adolescents and has been known to cause adults to vote Republican.

"This is a major public health issue that has been given short shrift," warns Michael W. Collins, a Detroit neuropsychologist. You know what often follows such a warning, don't you?

Geez, and we were only just getting around to treating soccer as the major league sport it is in European countries where they have been bouncing soccer balls off their heads since the days of Charlemagne.

Their treatment of a player felled by heading is simple?

"They put a wet sponge on his face, and that's it," says Erik Matser, a Dutch neuropsychologist.

So far, no one has proposed that heading be banned from the youth soccer fields or that youngsters wear helmets to absorb the blows.

"It's scary but there's nothing you can do about it when they want to play sports," says Soccer Mom Regina Smith of Wallingford, Pa. "You have to hope for the best."

Just like the old days, eh?

Historical train review leaves the station

Army Corps hosts meeting

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

The first session of the historical review of the MBTA's plan to restore rail service to the South Shore was "fruitful" in the eyes of Larry Rosenberg, chief public affairs officer of the Army Corps of Engineers (ACE). The Corps hosted the Sept. 15 meeting at its Concord office. The review is required under the Natural Historic Preservation Act.

The ACE is the lead federal agency involved in studying the MBTA's proposal to restore Greenbush rail service.

At the meeting, Rosenberg agreed with Hingham Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan that an all-out effort must be made to inform residents living along the railroad right-of-way of what the transit authority's latest plan includes. That issue will be discussed at subsequent historical review meetings scheduled for Sept. 29 and Oct. 6.

"The first thing we're talking about is the areas which will be affected by the project and what houses are entitled to protection," Macmillan said.

In the meantime, he's in contact with the Hingham board of selectmen about setting up a meeting in town for residents whose properties would be impacted by rail restoration. That way they could take a look at the latest MBTA maps outlining project details.

"This would provide an opportunity for homeowners to see how the MBTA characterizes (the impact of rail restoration on) their homes — low- or high-impact," he said. "We'll fight this house by house. Everyone is entitled to know as much information as (those involved closely with the project) know."

Representatives from the ACE and MBTA are expected to be present at the meetings with homeowners, which would be for the sole purpose of discussing the impact of Greenbush restoration on houses and other buildings located along the track and how the MBTA plans to deal with those.

Rosenberg agrees with Macmillan that homeowners need to have ready access to information relating to the impact of rail restoration on their property. To that end, the Corps will hold at least one more public meeting. Information, including mapping of the Hingham area as it relates to Greenbush restoration, will also be made available to the public.

Joseph Pesaturo, spokesperson for the MBTA, said the transit authority is pleased that the historical review process has begun.

"Last week's meeting was really an introductory session to set the agenda and schedules," he said. "The MBTA is just encouraged that we're getting the ball rolling. We're certainly confident that (the plan to restore Greenbush rail service) will move forward."

Rosenberg emphasized that the document the Corps released prior to Labor Day regarding the Greenbush project is still in draft form and will continue to be so until an objective decision has been made as a result of the historic review process.

"The first thing we're talking about is the areas which will be affected by the project and what houses are entitled to protection."
— Alexander Macmillan, Hingham Greenbush coordinator

"We have to find what the mitigation is going to be prior to releasing the final document," he said.

The Corp's assessment in its recent report that the MBTA's selected alternative — Greenbush rail restoration — meets the purpose of the project as defined by the MBTA shouldn't be interpreted as an endorsement of rail restoration, according to Rosenberg.

"We have no stake in the railroad. Our role is to ensure if there is one, it's in harmony with the environment and adds value to the environment, in both a natural and human (respect), and meets all the requirements of the National Historic Preservation Act."

As far as other transportation alternatives are concerned, the purpose of the project as defined by the MBTA set forth criteria, including providing new transportation services for the Greenbush corridor while obtaining a reasonably equivalent number of non-highway passengers as the commuter rail alternative would.

Macmillan feels it's premature to rule out other alternatives to rail restoration.

"Case law is contrary to the idea that if a certain alternative doesn't supply 100 percent of the ridership requirement, even if it's far less expensive, it won't be considered," he said, noting that the alternatives will be discussed at the Corps' Nov. 5 meeting.

Rosenberg feels strongly that the decision of whether or not to restore rail service to the South Shore shouldn't be left up to any federal agency.

"That issue should be defined by the state," he said.

It's up to the Corps to decide whether or not the alternative selected by the Commonwealth meets the requirements of the Clean Water Act, because the Corps is acting on a wetlands permit.

"We take our permitting role seriously, approaching it objectively, without bias," Rosenberg said.

If mitigation measures end up including a tunnel under the downtown Lincoln Historic District, it's not up to the Corps to say "yes" or "no," but rather to ensure a tunnel complies with both the historic preservation act and Clean Water Act, Rosenberg said.

The Corps has the authority to mandate a tunnel as part of the mitigation plan on that basis.

"However, sometimes the mitigation can be too expensive for the applicant," Rosenberg stated. "Our goal is still to find the least environmentally damaging alternative."

Some Hingham officials think a tunnel would be a useful step on lessening the adverse impacts of a train on Hingham.

Key players in the historical review are the Corps, MBTA, Massachusetts Historical Commission and the federal Advisory Council on Historic Preservation. Local officials from towns along the Greenbush corridor are also invited to attend. Macmillan and Hingham selectman Katharine Reardon were both present at last Wednesday's session.

The historic preservation act is designed to protect historic resources in all towns, but Macmillan said there are more of those in Hingham than in all the other communities along the Greenbush corridor combined.

"Although the historical commissions and boards of selectmen from other towns were invited, none appeared at the meeting," he said. "That was interesting."

However, Scituate officials may attend a later session.

"Cohasset has said it won't attend, and there's been no word from Weymouth or Braintree," Macmillan stated.

Once the historical review is finished, a final environmental impact statement will be issued.

PLAYGROUND PERILS
Everything from riding bicycles to participating in team sports presents children with sufficient opportunity to fall, collide with one another, and hurt themselves. Why not remove, therefore, a popular childhood attraction that fairly invites injury? With this in mind, the American Academy of Pediatrics has called for trampolines to be banished from playgrounds and backyards. In doing so, it cited government safety records recording 83,400 trampoline-related injuries in the U.S., an increase of 140% over the number reported in 1990. Climbing equipment, including jungle gyms, were also seen to be hazardous to children's health. Regardless of where falls occur, they can throw young bodies out of alignment. Chiropractic treatment can address these misalignments, as well as the imbalances they cause.
Children of all ages can benefit from chiropractic care. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are dedicated to helping you and your family achieve your ultimate goals and obtaining better health. "Our Mother's Morning Out" program helps give your children self-confidence and self trust. Taking her turn on the catwalk

Cohasset teen competing in pageant

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Amanda Jin Hee Cellucci

For many teenage girls, competing for the title of Miss Junior Teen Boston would be a dream come true. Watching beauty pageants on television and seeing the poised and glamorous contestants on the screen has caused many young girls to grow up with hopes of one day being on a similar stage.

Fifteen year-old Amanda Jin Hee Cellucci of Cohasset was not one of those girls. Though she was selected to compete in the Miss Junior Teen Boston pageant on Oct.3 at Worcester State College, her participation in the pageant came not as the fulfillment of a lifetime dream but rather as the result of a letter she received in the mail.

"I got a letter saying that somebody had recommended me for the pageant," Amanda said. "It wasn't something I had planned on doing, but it intrigued me and I decided 'hey, what the heck, why not go for it'?"

A three-sport athlete at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham, where she plays field hockey, softball, and is on the track and field team, Amanda submitted an application for the pageant and took part in an interview session conducted by Boston pageant coordinator Thomas DiPaula on Sept. 5. A total of 700 girls were interviewed in five different age groups, and Amanda was one of approximately 45 finalists selected to compete in the junior teen pageant, comprised of girls ages 13-15.

As this is her first foray into the world of pageants, Amanda said she did not know what to expect from the initial interview, but found the process to be quite painless.

"I was a little nervous because I had never done this kind of thing before," she said. "It was really easy, though. They basically just asked me about my extracurricular activities."

"It wasn't something I had planned on doing, but it intrigued me and I decided 'hey, what the heck, why not go for it'?"
—Amanda Jin Hee Cellucci

The interviewers must have liked what they heard, as personality is the number one aspect that each contestant is judged on during all phases of competition. At the Miss Junior Teen Boston pageant, a personal interview with the judges will take place prior to the actual pageant. At the pageant, the contestants will take part in the casual wear and formal wear modeling portions of the competition. Ten finalists will be chosen at that point and those ten will be asked a question on the spot, allowing them to demonstrate their poise and public speaking ability.

This year's Boston pageant is one of many local pageants which are being run across the country by Nationals, Inc., a pageant production company. The winner of each age of the five age groups in Boston will receive an all-expenses paid trip to compete for $60,000 in prizes and awards at the national competition, which will take place from Dec. 16-21 in Orlando, Florida.. In addition, contestants at the Boston pageant will be competing for more than $20,000 on scholarships, prizes, and specialty gifts.

Through sponsorships from local individuals, Amanda is receiving the training necessary to become a well-prepared contestant for the Boston pageant.

"You learn how to walk, turn on the runway, answer question, and be polite," she said. "It's nothing too complicated."

Amanda does not know who recommended her for the pageant, but said that her friends are extremely supportive and plan to be in attendance on her big night.

"They think it's awesome," she said of her friends. "They told me they're going to be in the audience yelling and holding signs."

Her mother is also excited about her youngest daughter's participation in the pageant.

"This is something that she wants to do, and I'm thrilled for her that she's made it this far. It's a wonderful life experience and she'll use these skills for the rest of her life."

Cancer Talk with Tania Lingos, MD

Esophageal Cancer: Prevention Offers More Potential

South Suburban Oncology Center

Limiting the risk of esophageal cancer is possible. As we noted last week, the disease is related to lifestyle choices. Therefore, to better protect your esophagus, which carries food and liquids from your throat to your stomach, take the following advice.

Do not chew or smoke tobacco. Do not abuse alcohol. Do not make a habit of consuming burning-hot beverages or large quantities of smoked/salt-cured products. If you have chronic indigestion or Barrett's esophogitis, get medical treatment. In addition, exercise, eat right and be alert for digestive difficulties.

While not one of America's most common cancers, the incidence of esophageal cancer is rising. This year, about 15,000 Americans, mostly 55 or older, will develop the disease. It strikes men more frequently than women and African-Americans more frequently than whites.

With esophageal cancer, prevention has greater potential than treatment. In its early stages, the disease can be hard to detect. Its symptoms often do not appear until the disease has advanced. Moreover, while treatable, esophageal cancer does not have a high cure rate.

As the cancerous tumor grows in the esophagus, it becomes more difficult or painful to swallow, first food, but eventually even liquids. If you are concerned about the disease, watch out for the following symptoms:

- Heartburn, indigestion
- Hoarseness, coughs, belching
- Weight loss, vomiting
- A choking sensation when swallowing food or liquids.

Of course, these symptoms could indicate problems less serious than esophageal cancer. If they persist, however, you should consult your physician. This is especially so if you are a smoker or a drinker, or both.

When esophageal cancer is detected early enough, sometimes surgery or aggressive combined modality therapy, including simultaneous chemotherapy and radiation followed by surgery, offer possible cures. Unfortunately, quite often the disease is detected too late for a cure. Combination therapy — surgery, radiation, and chemotherapy — can also be used to treat and alleviate pain and discomfort. Clearly, prevention and early detection is the best option.

First Parish fights through adversity

Interim minister leads congregation during a difficult period

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Finding the right person to lead a church congregation is possibly the most important decision that its members can make. The individual becomes a trusted confidant to virtually every church member and is counted on for wisdom and insight into their lives. The bond that is formed between minister and churchgoer is a special one that is nearly impossible to duplicate .

The loss of their minister of 26 years in 1995 and the diagnosis of cancer for another minister in early 1998 have caused the members of the First Parish Church on North Main Street to lean on each other through such difficult events. While the search continues for a settled, or full-time, minister, the Rev. Colin Leitch, an interim minister, is leading the Unitarian Universalist congregation in this period of transition.

"I'll be at the First Parish through August 2000, Leitch said, but by contract I cannot become the settled minister. I'm called an intentional interim minister, which means that I choose to lead congregations through periods of transition, such as the death or retirement of a settled minister."

A native of New Jersey, Leitch served as interim minister at a Unitarian Universalist church in Needham before coming to Cohasset. He came to town in 1998, following the cancer surgery of the Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox, who had been unanimously chosen to lead the parish after the transition period following the death of the beloved Rev. Edward Atkinson, who led the congregation from 1969 until his sudden death in 1995.

The loss of their minister of 26 years in 1995 and the diagnosis of cancer for another minister in early 1998 have caused the members of the First Parish Church on North Main Street to lean on each other through such difficult events.

Tarbox retired in May and is now Minister Emerita of First Parish.

"Elizabeth did a fabulous job in her short time here," said congregation member Roger Whitley, who was part of the search committee that chose her to become the settled minister. "Her illness was very difficult for her and very difficult for the parish."

Though the events of the last few years have been painful, Leitch said he enjoys helping the members of the parish to cope and look toward the future.

"There are specific challenges involved with being an interim minister," he said. "There's the excitement of consulting and problem solving, as well as preparing for the next settled minister."

Leitch is a graduate of Harvard Divinity School, though he said he is not entirely proud of that distinction.

"I sort of plead guilty to having gone to Hah-vud," he laughed. "It's full of wonderful students, but there's a lot of pretentiousness as well."

When not joking about his alma mater, Leitch is helping the parish in its preparations to expand and repair its Parish House on North Main Street.

"It's going to be a complete renovation, and will be new and larger within," he said. "We'll begin construction next spring, which will be a busy time because the congregation votes to call a minister in May."

The parish uses the term 'calling' a minister instead of hiring one, said Jane Goedecke, who is chairman of the search committee that will bring its choice for a settled minister to the congregation.

"We say calling a minister because it signifies something more profound than just hiring somebody for a job," she said. "Part of it has to do with the fact that a minister should have a calling. Basically, it's just a mutual agreement that it's the right fit for both the parish and the minister. It's a non-hierarchical system and we'll offer one candidate to a town meeting-type of gathering in the first week of May."

The process which the search committee will undertake before calling a minister is quite complex, according to Whitley.

"The search committee creates a 15-page survey on what direction the congregation should go," he said. "The results of that survey are sent to Unitarian Universalist headquarters and they send us a list of ministers that need to be settled and information about them. From that, we talk with the people that we're interested in, and we invite some of them to come here for a weekend."

During the last search to choose a settled minister, four prospective candidates were brought to Cohasset. The search committee dined with them and interviewed them to get a feel for how their personalities would fit the parish. Finally, the committee arranged for each of them to preach at a Unitarian Universalist church in the area.

"The members of those churches did not know why they had a guest preacher on those days," Whitley said. "We wanted to see how they did in the pulpit and how they related to children."

Tarbox was unanimously chosen by the search committee, whose decision was endorsed by the unanimous vote of the congregation in the fall of 1997. While the process can be exhausting, Whitley said the hard work is worth it in the end.

"We made sure that we got who we wanted and she made sure that the parish wanted her," he said.

OBITUARIES

James Young Deupree

James Young Deupree, 80, died Sept. 19, in Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston.

The son of Richard and Martha Deupre, he was born on May 23, 1919, in Cincinnati, Ohio., then lived in Cohasset for 20 years and Florida for 30 years.

Mr. Deupree flew with the 8th Air Force in Europe during World War II as a navigator on a B17. He worked for Procter & Gambel for 22 years as a plant manager in Cincinnati and Quincy. He was then self-employed in Naples, Fla. until he retired.

He served his community as chairman of the board of the United Fund of Quincy, and chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Quincy South Shore Chamber of Commerce. He received the Community Service Award from the Chamber in 1961. He was on the board of The Conservancy of Southwest Florida, on the board of the First National Bank of Naples, and was commodore of the Naples Yacht Club.

Mr. Deupree's passions were his wife and family, his dogs and boating. He was also a master jigsaw puzzle maker.

He leaves his wife, Mary Louise Deupree; sister Elizabeth Goldsmith of Cincinnati; his children, Janet Miller of Seattle, Wash., Margot Grund of Cincinnati, Steve Deupree of Charlottesville, Va., David Whittaker of Cincinnati, Charles Deupree of Ionia, Mich., and Sally Whittaker of Cambridge; 14 grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held in Naples at a later date.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Conservancy of Southwest Florida, 1450 Merrihew Drive, Naples, FL 33940.

Robert A. Leonard Sr.

Robert A. Leonard Sr., a lifelong resident of Cohasset, died Sept. 21 at home after a long illness. He was 83.

As a plumbing and oil burner technician, Mr. Leonard was employed all his life in the family-owned business, Leonard Plumbing & Heating.

A graduate of Franklin Institute in 1939, he received a degree in plumbing science and design. During World War II he carried his trade with him as he served as a pipefitter at the Hingham Shipyard.

Mr. Leonard was founder of the Cohasset Little League in 1952 and managed the first championship team. He was a supporter of the Catholic church and a member of St. Anthony's men's choir.

An active participant in Cohasset municipal activities, he was elected for two terms on the Planning Board (1942-1951), served as ballot inspector, election officer, volunteer firefighter and plumbing and gas inspector. The latter of these duties he performed until just prior to his eightieth birthday.

A Superior Achievement Award was presented to Mr. Leonard by Secretary of State Michael Connolly for a voting record of more than 50 consecutive years beginning in 1937.

His beloved wife of 57 years, Lucie Marie, preceded him in death by only five weeks.

Mr. Leonard leaves two sons, Robert A. Jr. and his wife Mary of Marco Island, Fla. and Roger E. and his wife Karen of North Quincy. He was father of the late Alice F. Leonard and brother of the late Richard F. Leonard formally of Cohasset.

A funeral service will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, Sept. 24, at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset. Interment will be private.

In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to the American Cancer Society, 30 Speen St., Framingham, MA 01701.

Church leaders give timely counsel

Leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon) will give timely counsel to the world on the brink of the millennium. The semi-annual conference held the first weekend of October will be broadcast live via satellite from church headquarters in Salt Lake City to stake centers throughout the United States and locally at the LDS Chapel, 379 Gardner St. in Hingham.

Conference sessions may be viewed Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 2 and 3, from noon to 2 p.m. and from 4 to 6 p.m. Members of the public are welcome to attend. The conference is under the direction of Gordon B. Hinckley, president and prophet of the church. Inspirational music will be sung by the Tabernacle Choir prior to the Sunday session. Regular Sunday meeting schedules will be resumed the following week.

New coach, outlook for boys soccer team

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High boys soccer team has a new look this year, and opposing coaches are already taking notice.

"We've had people from the other teams congratulating us for keeping the games so close," said first year coach Juan Ramos, whose team is now 0-2-1. "I want to be more than just competitive, though."

That's understandable, since Ramos was a four-time high school state coach of the year while living in New Mexico. It's been an adjustment for Ramos, to say the least.

"The level of commitment to the game varies quite a bit," said Ramos. "Some schools have excellent practice fields, while other schools have fields that are in just terrible shape."

Ramos enjoys the change of scenery in New England after living in New Mexico for 16 years.

"My wife and I were both teachers in New Mexico and we both wanted to leave," said Ramos, who was born in Puerto Rico. "We both got teaching jobs at Milton Academy as teachers."

The move has been invigorating for Ramos.

"My wife and I enjoy the Boston area very much," said Ramos, who came over to the U.S. and joined the Air Force in 1971. "The surrounding areas are just great."

After living in New Mexico, one would think that Ramos would dread the arrival of the winter season, but he is not concerned.

"My wife and I live in a dorm at the Academy, so we don't have to drive in the bad weather or anything," said Ramos

Ramos decided he wanted to continue coaching, and the Skippers had an opening. So far, it's been a good fit for both the school and the coach.

"We're a young team," said Ramos. "We're getting better all the time. We've only had three games and a few scrimmages."

Although the Skippers are still in search of their first win, Ramos is pleased with the effort he has received from his players.

"The kids have been tremendous," said Ramos, who teaches math at Milton. "They keep working hard every day."

In practice and in the games, Ramos has already had senior co-captains Ben Peterson and Kevin Devito, who plays in goal, step up, along with juniors Eric Shea and Doug O'Brien, and sophomore Matt Bilodeau.

"Those are the main players," said Ramos. "They really provide leadership. The other kids look up to them."

The schedule has not been kind to the first-year coach.

"We've played the top two teams in the league already, and both games were close," said Ramos, referring to defending South Shore League champs Norwell, and Norton. "We lost to Norwell 4-3. We're doing a little better."

Judging by Ramos' track record, things will continue to get better for the Skippers, much to the dismay of their opponents.

Field hockey a little offensive

By Mark Ducharme
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick does not mind if her team gets a little offensive.

After all in the early part of the season the veteran coach will be relying on her offense to carry the load. The Skippers, who just missed the tournament with a 6-6-4 record by a point, had three players graduate, all from the defense.

"I feel that I have some very fast and smart offensive players," said Bostwick, who will be coaching all 35 players on the varsity and junior varsity. "My offense is one of the better ones I have had in my 12 years as coach."

While the defense tries to get in synch with new players being put in new positions, Bostwick is hoping the offense will ease the pressure for her team.

"If the offense can score it will take the pressure off our defense," said Bostwick. "We are trying to fill some voids at halfback and fullback. With the offense scoring it will allow the new players to feel comfortable with their positions."

Senior tri-captain Jennifer Meehan will anchor the defense. She will play sweeper and during the game float to center fullback and center midfield.

Senior Naomi Amesberg, who shuttles between the varsity and junior varsity, will play right fullback, and Kelly Straughn will play at sweeper with Sarah Kidder, who played soccer a year ago, starting at left fullback. Kelly Lordan will see plenty of time at center fullback, while Lydia Guild and Susan Dane will be key reserves in the back line.

The Skippers are strong in goal. They were hoping to have senior Melissa Rosano and junior Krysten Considine share the netminding duties. However ,Rosano missed the first three games because of mono.

Ashley Ulmer, Morgan Hurley and Kelly Devine will start at halfback with Karen Morris coming off the bench to play both halfback and up front.

As for the up front talent, senior tri-captain Melissa Pyforn will be joined by Andi Shaughnessy and Maggie O'Connor. The three have already contributed in the first three games for Cohasset.

"I have had all of these players since the seventh grade and they are coming together as a team," said Bostwick.

The Skippers began with two games on the road. Both ending up as 2-1 decisions with Cohasset winning one and losing one.

The one they won was in Middleboro where Meehan and O'Connor scored the goals with Shaughnessy assisting on one of the tallies.

"We had some great shots in the game," commented Bostwick. "The goal that Middleboro got was because we were not in shape and there was a lack of coverage. We've got to be in shape, because some of the players are going to be playing the full game."

The other 2-1 decision was a loss at Hingham. The Skippers who tied the Harbormen a year ago.

Shaughnessy scored the Cohasset goal with five minutes left and nearly tied the game in the final seconds. She took a pass in front of the net, but could not get off a shot before the clock ran out.

The home opener saw the Skippers explode offensively in dumping

Skippers girls soccer faces a big week

Deb Beal has seen it before. There are teams that don't know how to win on a consistent basis. The solution is simple, come up with some victories, breed the confidence and build from there.

The Cohasset head coach believes the phenomenon is more mental than physical and Beal is confident the Lady Skippers will break out of their 0-2-1 record this season.

After Cohasset wound up on the down-side of a lopsided 6-0 loss to a very strong Norwell team, the Lady Skippers' Cathryn Flaherty took matters into her own hands Tuesday, drilling home three goals within six minutes to help pull out a tie against Randolph, ending Cohasset's two-game losing streak and giving the Lady Skippers a much-needed boost.

"She got a hold of it three times in a row," Beal said of Flaherty. "I've been telling them all year the soccer gods haven't been on our side. We've been hitting the post and there have been some great cross passes in front of the net, but nobody has been there. "Once the flood gates open, they're (goals) going to keep coming."

Once again, Maura O'Brien played a solid game between the posts for the Lady Skippers, coming up with several big saves. Kara Foley figured into the offensive mix, feeding Flaherty a pass on one of her goals to register an assist. Flaherty's two other goals were unassisted.

The final eight minutes of the game proved to be the most exciting as both teams desperately put shots on goal, attempting to break the deadlock.

Though the Lady Skippers "aren't used to winning yet," they have been playing pretty sound soccer. The transition game still is a long way from where Beal would like it, but Cohasset is playing far better than this time a year ago.

"We're 10 steps ahead of where we were last year," Beal said.

The Lady Skippers won't have an easy time of things come this afternoon when they play South Shore League juggernaut, Hanover. Cohasset, Beal admitted, will have a tough

Cohasset 10-year-old All-Stars take championship

The Cohasset 10-year-old All-Star baseball team won the District 8 League Championship, when they defeated Whitman, 3-1, under the lights at the Braintree American Little League field, Saturday, Aug. 14.

Cohasset relied on strong base running, sound defense and the outstanding pitching performance of Tim Smith to secure the victory. Cohasset's hard-throwing right hander (Smith) pitched a complete game (six innings) allowing only three base runners (two hits and one walk) while recording a season high 14 strikeouts.

Cohasset took the early lead in the top half of the first inning when lead off hitter Austin Lanzalotti walked and advanced to second and third on wild pitches. Displaying outstanding quickness Lanzalotti stole home when a pitch rolled away from the Whitman catcher.

Whitman struck back quickly in their half of the first, tying the score when Smith walked the lead-off batter who was driven in by a soft line drive to right which dropped in front of Cohasset's Fletcher Smalzel. Smalzel made a strong throw to catcher Jared Kinch but the Whitman player was called safe on a close play.

Smith, backed by a solid defense, shut down Whitman for the rest of the game. Only one of their next 16 batters reached base. In the bottom of the third inning Cohasset's outstanding catcher Jared Kinch made a great play on a pop foul for the first out.

Smith took the steam out of Whitman when on a near perfect bunt he reacted quickly and fired a perfect strike to Cohasset's sure-handed first baseman, Justin Alexander, who stretched, making the catch and just beating the speedy Whitman baserunner for the out.

Cohasset took the lead for good in the fourth inning when with one out Nick Zappollo walked and Reed Dickenson was hit by a pitch.

Cohasset executed a double steal and when the errant throw to third sailed into left field Zappollo raced home. Displaying his outstanding speed Dickenson stole home when a pitch got away from the Whitman catcher.

Whitman's only other base-runner came in their half of the fourth with a solid double to right center. Smith ended the threat by striking out the next two batters to end the inning.

In the bottom of the fifth, Cohasset's sure-handed second baseman, Corbin Faber, made a great play by knocking down a hard hit grounder and making an accurate throw to the new first baseman Ryan Poh. Smith then struck out the next five batters he faced to end the game. Smith also recorded Cohasset's only hit, a solid double to left center.

The 10-year-old squad started the season with a 9-8 loss to Braintree American, but then ripped off 13 straight victories on their way to the championship, ending the season 14-1.

"Every player on the team made a significant contribution to our success. The coaches are very proud of the kids. They showed a lot of heart and character and represented Cohasset in a very positive way."

Flag football sign up Saturday

Flag football registration is open to children ages 5-12 years old. Registration will be held on Saturday, Sept. 25 from 1-3 p.m. at the PAL Field on Beal Street in Hingham, off of route 3A, behind the Lincoln Plaza.

The registration fee is $40 per child with a $70 maximum fee per family.

This program is the only flag football league available to children on the South Shore. Registration will be accepted on a first-come, first serve basis until all roster openings are filled.

For more information, call 740-0590 or 383-9122.

Scituate, a 5-2 victory.

"We dominated 85 percent of the game after they scored the first goal," said Bostwick. "It was the first time that we have scored five goals against Scituate in my 12 years."

Shaughnessy scored two first-half goals and later assisted on a second-half goal.

Meehan, Hurley and Pyforn were the other goal scorers for Cohasset.

time against the Lady Indians. What she wants to see from her team is for it to keep its composure and "heads in the game."

Cohasset, though, played well against Hanover last season. Despite losing both games, the Lady Skippers were hardly embarrassed by the Lady Indians, falling short by scores of 2-0 and 3-0. Cohasset's overall athleticism will keep them in the game, provided they play hard and stay alert the entire game. If they hit a rut and lose their concentration, the Lady Skippers could find themselves trailing pretty quickly.

Cohasset then plays a very beatable Hull team at home Friday (5 p.m.), followed by another squad the Lady Skippers should match up well with, Mashpee on Monday.

Cohasset has a great opportunity to garner its first two wins of the season. If the Lady Skippers come away with the pair of victories, they may just go on a successful run. The flood gates have to open sometime soon.

Free web sites available

Does your team have a free web site yet? The fall sports season is almost here and the Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), is offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

For high school coaches, this is a great way to get out the news of your team without spending any money from your town's school budget. There's no need to wait for some outside company to handle all the coding because you, members of your team and/or their parents can easily update these sites.

For more information on this free program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

Football squad looks to bounce back Saturday at Cape Cod Tech

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

As if the remnants of the rains and winds from Hurricane Floyd weren't enough, Cohasset High head football coach Tony Rolfe had another season-opening game to give him the excuse to stay in bed Saturday.

Given the choice, Rolfe probably would have preferred a good hurricane last Friday than facing Mashpee the following day on Alumni Field.

Not that the second-year coach isn't looking forward to a fall of leading the Skippers through their South Shore League schedule after last year's solid 5-5 season. It's just that Rolfe has never been a big fan of game No. 1 — not this year or any other.

"Of all the games during the season, it's my least favorite," said the personable Rolfe. "There are always surprises in the first game and I don't like surprises."

Cohasset's 40-0 pasting at the hands of non-league opponent Mashpee only proved Rolfe's point that season-openers are the darkest games of the season for head coaches. And that is multiplied 10-fold for Rolfe, who admittedly doesn't like surprises.

Mashpee scored more points off the Skippers' punting game than their defense, putting up 21 points.

"We did play pretty well in the first quarter," said Rolfe. "I don't think they were 40 points better than us."

Rolfe had little to cheer about, though the play of Liam O'Donnell was a bright spot for Cohasset. O'Donnell won the one-on-one battles with the lineman across from him and registered a number of the Skippers' tackles.

"They played as well as anyone, defensively," said Rolfe.

The Skippers headed into the season-opener in good shape after a strong showing in last week's dress rehearsal, also known as the South Shore League Football Jamboree. Cohasset played well on defense and its offense was able to move the ball during its time on the field against Hanover and Abington.

"They (Cape Cod Tech) run the ball right at you. The only thing that will make us feel better about the Mashpee loss is for us to play well the rest of the year."
- COACH TONY ROLFE

As for scouting Mashpee, Rolfe had "evaluated film from last year," but admitted there wasn't much the coaching staff could use because the team has a new coach with a new system. Even without a new coach, the game film wouldn't have told Rolfe much. Only after the first game or two of the present season does he truly study film in determining what schemes the Skippers can prepare for in practice.

Rolfe did know Mashpee had everybody back from the team that defeated Cohasset in last year's season opener. A year ago, the Skippers more than played their part in making things easy for Mashpee by turning the ball over at inopportune times. It's the turnovers that Rolfe said absolutely must be avoided if Cohasset wants to come away with a win.

"We have to maintain our composure," Rolfe said three days before the Mashpee tilt. "It'll be an interesting game."

Cohasset's plan to mix the run with the pass to keep Mashpee's defense off balance never materialized. Quarterback Jason Brown will get more than his share of opportunities to throw the ball this season, while backs Dan Trowers and Brian Krupczak were expected to put Mashpee's defense to the test with their speed out of the backfield.

"We have to mix the run and pass," Rolfe said. "We surely need to pass the ball. If you can pass the ball well in high school you can be pretty successful."

Sophomores Will Prendergrast and Jari Martin stepped up and played particularly well in the jamboree in leading an overall solid showing by the offensive line. The line, however, had definite problems opening holes for Trowers and Krupczak to gain their first downs.

"Their line was stronger than I thought," said Rolfe. "They (Mashpee) did a real nice job. We knew we were still finding our way with the kids. After looking at the (game) film, we saw it wasn't hopeless."

Cohasset had worked hard in practice and played impressively during its scrimmages. It's crucial the Skippers don't dwell on the Mashpee loss, especially with Cape Cod Tech slated for Saturday. Cohasset must concentrate on executing its game plan, namely, clogging up the middle and shutting down a potent Tech running game.

"They run the ball right at you," Rolfe said. "The only thing that will make us feel better about the Mashpee loss is for us to play well the rest of the year."

Library Internet policy

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library provides public access to the Internet in keeping with its role as a source of information, intellectual development and enrichment for the community.

The Internet workstations are located in the adult reference room. Before using one, users must present their library card and sign the register at the main service desk. Sign-up is for 30 minutes or longer, if no one is waiting, and is on a first-come, first-served basis.

The library's Internet is intended for research and information, not for games or chat rooms. Transmission of any materials in violation of federal or state regulations, including but not limited to copyrighted, threatening, obscene or pornographic material or material protected by trade secret is prohibited.

Child access to the library's Internet is the responsibility of the child's parent or guardian. It is the library's recommendation that children not yet in grade 6 be accompanied by a parent or guardian when using the Internet.

The library's Internet policy is available in writing at the main service desk and is posted at the workstations.

Library reception

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library staff, Library Trustees and Friends of the Library invite friends, family and the public to a reception Sunday, Oct. 3, from 5-7 p.m. honoring former employee Nancy Knight who passed away in February.

Mrs. Knight was a devoted employee of the library who served [illegible] more than 30 years as magazine organizer and book processor.

Internet training and computers needed

Interested in learning more about how to use the Internet?

The library is planning a short series of beginner Internet training sessions for the public. Several talented teachers have volunteered as instructors, and classes will probably meet from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Class size will be kept small to maximize hands-on learning at the library's three MediaOne terminals. If you are interested, call 383-1348 or ask at the front desk for a registration form.

The library is also asking the community for donations of usable Mac computers. If you find yourself wondering what to do with that dusty computer in your attic, call the library and ask for Janet Husband, library director. This is a great way to support your local library and provide public computer access.

New library progress

Recently, the Massachusetts legislature appropriated sufficient funds in its supplemental 1999 budget to make construction grants to all the libraries currently on the waiting list. This means that Cohasset will be able to apply for the new round of state grants as soon as the regulations are promulgated and the "Intent to Apply" forms are mailed out to public libraries.

Stay tuned to Library Corner for developing news on this exciting project.

a. 12 tons
b. 24 tons
c. 60 tons
d. 120 tons

2. Let's say your vehicle is due for an Enhanced Emissions & Safety Test. When is the best time to go?

a. Any Tuesday around 1:17 a.m.
b. The last week of the month like everyone else
c. Let me check with the Psychic Friends Connection
d. Early to mid-month

3. What happens to air pollution when it rains?

a. It gets wet
b. It comes back to earth and seeps into the soil
c. It comes back to earth and runs off into lakes, streams and other bodies of water
d. b and c

4. While the safety portion of the Enhanced Emissions & Safety Test is conducted every year, how often do you have to get a biennial emissions test?

a. Every other year

ENHANCED EMISSIONS & SAFETY TEST
Coming October 1

If you want to know about the upcoming enhanced emissions test, take this simple quiz.

To locate a licensed testing station, or for more information, call toll-free, 1-877-387-8234 or visit http://vehicletest.state.ma.us.

ANSWERS: 1.d. Air pollution will be decreased by 120 tons a day. States with similar emissions testing have seen a 25% decrease in air pollution from vehicles. 2.d. To avoid waiting in line, don't wait until the end of the month to have your vehicle tested. 3.d. When it rains, air pollution returns to earth to become soil and water pollution. 4.a. Because the new emissions test is better and more comprehensive, you only have to take the test every other year. The safety test, however, is still required annually. 5.a. Keep your car properly cared for and the test should be a snap. 6.d. No one in the Commonwealth benefits from air pollution, and it's toughest on our children, the elderly and those who work outdoors.

Teacher Appreciation Days

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset and Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham celebrate back-to-school with its "Teacher Appreciation Days" Sept. 23-26. Special deals are available on a wide selection of wonderful books, especially paperback early readers and non-fiction, and other educational materials for classroom use. Teachers can find a variety of free items, as well as the usual 20 percent discount on non-sale items for use in the classroom. Call (781) 383-2665 or (781) 749-2665 for more information.

BAYDAY celebration

On Sunday, Sept. 26 the 67-acre Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham will be transformed into South Shore ARC's BAYDAY complete with a $10,000 silent auction, food court, and children's entertainment. Keith James and Potentials Unlimited, a performance group made up of professional musicians, actors, and adults with special needs are headlining the onstage entertainment.

"Keith James and Potentials Unlimited challenges stereotypes and changes labels," said performance director Sandy Tannebaum Streid. "As we delight audiences, we demonstrate that everyone's potential is indeed unlimited."

Additional activities include pumpkin and face painting, pony and pony cart rides, a hug-a-bunny area, soccer and baseball speed radar, basketball shooting, golf putting area, moonwalks, and inflatables. The Glastonbury Abbey is at 16 Hull St. near the intersection of Routes 3A and 228 in Hingham. Primary Corporate Sponsor is Frye Agency of Braintree, and the Children's Games sponsor is Comtronics of Quincy. Admission is $5 per carload. Additional information can be found at http://bayday.hypermart.net or by calling 781-335-3023, ext. 120.

South Shore ARC provides services to South Shore people who are developmentally disabled or at risk for developmental delay through its First Early Intervention program, Harbor Employment Services, and its Community and Residential Services programs.

Breast health is topic

On Tuesday, Sept. 28, at Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers' Residence on Cohasset Harbor at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Suniti Nimbkar will be hosting an informal discussion regarding breast health.

Nimbkar joined Surgical Specialist Inc. in 1993. She is a graduate of Boston University Medical School and trained at the University Hospital. Nimbkar is Board certified in general surgery, and she was one of the first surgeons at South Shore Hospital to perform sentinel lymph node biopsies.

The program is sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health. It is free of charge and open to the general public. Light refreshments will be served.

In conjunction with Breast Cancer Awareness Month in October, Mobile Diagnostics Inc. will bring its mammography van to Cohasset Town Hall parking lot on Saturday, Oct. 9 from 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

For more information or to make an appointment, please call the League office at 781-383-0771.

Fall classes at center

South Shore Community Center is offering fall classes for children and adults.

Starting in September are adult fitness, dance, computer, cooking classes, finance, home decorating, and much more. For children, there is dance, gymnastics, pre-school play groups, and much more.

Call 781-383-0088 for a brochure of all class listings. New members are welcome, but membership is not required.

Historical Society events

This fall will see a continuation of the Society's popular series of informal Thursday evening programs devoted to various facets of Cohasset's history. Oct. 7 will feature Scituate Historical Society President David Ball talking about the Great Gale of 1898, often called the "Portland Gale" for the steamer Portland that sank with all persons in that fierce storm.

On Oct. 14 Curator Dave Wadsworth will present a program the subject to be announced soon. And on Oct. 28 Rebecca Bates-McArthur and others will present a second talk on the fascinating history of Beechwood. These programs will be held at the Lighthouse Keepers' house, Government Island, and will meet at 7:30 p.m. with the talk starting at 7:45 p.m. There will be light refreshments.

The Society's annual meeting will be held at Kimball's-by-the-Sea on Sunday, Oct. 24. There will be a social hour from 5 to 6 p.m. and then dinner, followed by an illustrated talk by Curator Dave Wadsworth, the title called "The Road to Jerusalem Revisited." The original presentation of the history of Jerusalem Road was given in the 1980's at a Society meeting, and this will be a revised version of that fascinating subject. Jerusalem Road is one of the most ancient of highways in Cohasset, with a particularly varied history. More will be announced soon about the 1999 annual meeting and dinner with program, but be sure to reserve that date.

The cost is $30 for members and $35 for non-members. For reservations contact the Society at 14 Summer St. or call 383-1434.

Robert B. Parker to speak

Robert B. Parker will speak and sign copies of his newest mystery, "Family Honor," featuring a new character, female P.I. Sunny Randall, Thursday, Sept. 30, from 7:30-9 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Route 3A, Cohasset.

Perhaps best known for his Spenser private eye series, Boston dean of American crime fiction, Parker is at the top of his game. With numerous novels and movies under his belt, where does one go from here? To new characters ... Meet Sunny Randall, former cop, former wife, aspiring painter, working private detective.

As is evident in her debut in "Family Honor," Randall is as tough as any 10-minute egg, whether she's dealing with a pimp named Pharoah Fox, a 15-year-old runaway with a chip on her shoulder, her own interfering mother or her handsome ex-husband. Written expressly for Oscar-winning actress Helen Hunt to play in the film adaptation some time next year, Randall is sure to generate the fans that Spenser did.

Although this event is free, reservations are required for seating and refreshments. Call Buttonwood at (781) 383-2665 for more information.

LEGAL NOTICES

COHASSET HOUSING AUTHORITY

LEGAL NOTICE ADVERTISEMENT

The Cohasset Housing Authority, the Awarding Authority, invites sealed bids from general contractors for the Modernization of Housing for the Cohasset Housing Authority in Cohasset, Massachusetts.

The Project consists of reconstruction of an entry porch at Development 689-1, 72 Elm Street.

The work is estimated to cost $24,000/

General bidders must be certified by the Division of Capital Asset Management in the following category of work: General Building Construction.

Bids are subject to M.G.L. c. 149 44A-J and to minimum wage rates as required by M.G.L. c. 149 26 to 27H inclusive.

General Bids will be received until 1:00 p.m., October 7, 1999 and publicly opened, forthwith.

Mailed Bids should be sent to Cohasset Housing Authority, 72 Elm Street, Cohasset, MA 02025 and received no later than the date and time specified above.

General bids shall be accompanied by a bid deposit that is not less than five (5%) of the greatest possible bid amount (considering all alternates), and made payable to the Cohasset Housing Authority.

Bid Forms and Contract Documents will be available for pick-up at The Office of the Architect, Strekalovsky & Hoit, Inc., 51 North Street, Hingham, MA 02043 after 10:00 a.m. on August 25, 1999 upon deposit of a certified or cashier's check in the amount of $25.00 per set, payable to Strekalovsky & Hoit, Inc. This deposit will be refunded for up to two sets for general bidders and for one set for sub-bidders upon return of the sets in good condition within thirty days of receipt of general bids. Otherwise the deposit shall be the property of the Awarding Authority. Additional sets may be purchased for $25.00. Bidders requesting Contract Documents to be mailed to them shall include a separate check for $15.00 per set, payable to Strekalovsky & Hoit, Inc. to cover mail handling costs.

The job site and/or existing building will be available for inspection between 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. Monday through Thursday. For an appointment call Ms. Marilyn LeBlanc at (781) 383-1948.

The Contract Documents may be seen, but not removed at:

Architects to provide school cost projections

Estimates to be given at Oct. 7 school committee meeting

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

With all the debate surrounding the various renovation options for Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle High School, the school committee and town are finally a week away from getting a rough idea about what those options will cost.

At its Oct. 7 meeting, the school committee will get those cost projections from architects from the Hingham firm Strekalovsky and Hoit, who have been hired to determine preliminary cost projections and to draw up plans that will be presented at the Dec. 6 special town meeting.

"I anticipate that we'll be presenting the town with two or three options at the December town meeting," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "At that meeting, we'll seek the funds necessary to do final drawings on the one option that the town decides upon."

The money necessary to build that project would have to then be appropriated at the annual town meeting in March.

"Come March, we'll seek the funds to actually construct the project according to the bid documents provided by the architects," DeGiacomo said.

According to architects Don Walters and Gene Raymond of Strekalovsky and Hoit, that project will be fairly extensive, due in large part to the ad-

Educators make case for 6-8 middle school

Say it would best serve the developmental needs of children

Imagine a talented sixth-grade student in Cohasset, not a stretch considering the quality of students who are in the town's public schools each year. This student reads at an eighth or ninth grade reading level, and is ready to explore advanced topics. Allowing such opportunities to that student is difficult in an elementary school setting geared toward younger children. In a middle school, however, that student would have more opportunities to fulfill his or her academic potential.

That was the gist of the message delivered by the town's educational hierarchy at last Monday's school committee meeting. Supt. of Schools Dr. Edward Malvey was joined by Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan, Cohasset Middle High School principal Curtis Collins, and K-12 curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey in explaining their desire to see Cohasset adopt a 6-8 middle school format.

"The middle school organization appeals to the young adolescent and the research I did shows that the sixth-grader belongs at a middle school."

— K-12 curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey

"In researching the developmental needs of sixth-graders, who are typically 11 years old, we found that they are more like seventh-graders than they are like fifth-graders," Fen-

Parking fines are increased

Selectmen vote to make fees more of a deterrent

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Whether they be in a rush of errands before they pick up their kids, or simply unable to find a parking space near the common on a festive Saturday afternoon, people often park illegally in Cohasset. Many of these violations occur at the town's beaches, where nonresidents will often knowingly risk a ticket in return for a nice day at a secluded beach.

Residents also park illegally, however, and selectmen have raised parking fines across town to act as a deterrent in all areas of town. Parking tickets across town have been increased from $15 to the $25 already in effect at Sandy Beach, while fines in handicapped zones have been raised from $25 to $100. The new parking fines will become effective Nov. 1.

Parking ticket increases do not have to go before Town Meeting because of a vote taken at a Special Town Meeting on October 28, 1996, which allows selectmen to raise the parking fines in town by a simple majority of the board's members.

Article 20 of that meeting allowed the selectmen to establish a schedule of fines for parking violations and set the maximum amount for a fine paid within 21 days at $25. State law allows towns to assess handicapped parking violations of no less than $25 and sets the maximum handicapped parking ticket at $100.

Neither police chief Brian Noonan nor Town Manager Mark Haddad had projections about how much money the increased fees would

Town Hall hours changed

Selectmen voted on Tuesday to keep Town Hall open until 7 p.m. on Tuesdays instead of Thursdays, effective Nov. 8.

The decision to make Tuesdays the "long days" at Town Hall was the result of two major factors.

"Most holidays are on Mondays, which means that Tuesdays are very busy days around here," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "In addition, we do payroll on Tuesday, so employees will have a little extra time to get that work done.""

New policy set for Milliken Field parking

Parking on the east side of Bancroft Road and the south side of Norfolk Road will be prohibited while soccer games are occurring on Saturdays this fall.

The move, approved by selectmen on Tuesday, comes as a result of safety concerns. Emergency vehicles have not been able to gain access through those roads during game times due to the amount of parked cars.

"We've got between 1,200 and 1,500 people at that field on Saturday's between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., said Wallace St. John, who directs the soccer program. "Parking has been a major problem."

While accepting the recommendation of St. John and Town Manager Mark Haddad that the parking restrictions be implemented, selectman Merle Brown said the problem should be studied following the soccer season.

"This is something we need to look into more comprehensively after the fall," he said.

Legislative help for Beechwood culvert

Town Manager Mark Haddad has contacted both state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray in an attempt to secure their help to gain funding for the repair of the Beechwood Street culvert.

According to Haddad, both legislators said they would do their best to help secure the funding. He said he would keep selectmen appraised of any progress.

Special town meeting date set

Selectmen voted on Tuesday to officially call for a Special Town Meeting to be held on Monday, Dec. 6, at 7:p.m. at the Cohasset High School Sullivan Gymnasium.

"With the issue of school buildings coming up, I don't think the auditorium will be large enough to accommodate all of the people that will be there," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Citizen petition articles for the December town meeting must be submitted by Tuesday, Oct. 5, at 4:30 p.m. and must have 100 signatures.

Overtime due to Tropical Storm Floyd

Though it didn't hit the Cohasset coast with the ferocity that many meteorologists had predicted, Tropical Storm Floyd did bring some high winds to town, causing downed trees and power outages.

A reserve fund transfer of $3,584 was approved by selectmen on Tuesday to pay overtime costs accrued by employees of the Department of Public works who responded to those events.

"After the sun came up last Friday, we really got leveled," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Olmsted stamp presented at World's End

PHOTOS/BOB BURNS

Hingham post master William Graney talks about the details in the stamp that commemorates the life of Frederick Law Olmsted.

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Although Frederick Law Olmsted's landscape design of World's End in Hingham was intended to enhance a 150-home subdivision that was never built, there's little doubt he would have approved of the way the peninsula turned out.

The 160-plus acre park, owned by the Trustees of Reservations, provides a welcome refuge away from the hubbub of modern life.

"I love the variety of landscape, the ocean and harbor views," said Scituate's Lynne Layman, chairman of the Friends of World's End. "The hills, the trees, the paths — you feel like you are in a different place in a way with no cars, no traffic, no phones."

A reproduction of the Frederick Law Olmsted stamp.

Olmsted, who is known for designing New York's Central Park, the grounds of the US Capitol and the Boston Park System from the Back Bay Fens to Franklin Park among others, believed in "communitivness." That's bringing people together from all walks of life together in beautiful, healthful landscapes, explained Alan Banks, lead park ranger, at the Olmsted National Historic Site in Brookline.

Banks and Layman joined about 50 other people at World's End on Sunday afternoon for the Hingham Post Office's presentation of a special "second day cancellation" of the new Olmsted stamp. The Friends served refreshments. Arthur Roebuck of the British Relief in Hingham Square donated the sandwiches.

Post Master William Graney presented the stamp to Al Yalenezian, superintendent of World's End and other area Trustees' properties.

"On behalf of the US Postal Service and the employees at the Hingham Post Office, I am delighted to be here today," Graney said, explaining that the presentation was part of a community outreach project.

"We know how hard you work to make this place a wonderful one to visit," Graney told Yalenezian.

Banks, the park ranger, said Olmsted would feel honored by being commemorated with a stamp.

"Although he could be humble about himself," Banks said. "He was never humble about his work.

"I also believe that a postage stamp is a fitting way to honor him because ultimately much of what Olmsted was attempting to do was to connect people — both to nature and to each other."

Shirley Martin of Cohasset, who is also a member of the Friends of World's End, said the park is a beautiful mix of ocean views and landscape.

"It's a treasure within a short distance from us all," she said.

Sheets of 20 stamps along with stamped envelopes, which were hand-canceled at the event by postal workers, were on sale with proceeds benefiting the Trustees of Reservations, a non-profit organization founded by one of Olmsted's apprentices and partners, Charles Eliot.

Hingham's Rick Rizzotto, 53, has been coming to World's End his entire life.

"I've always had an appreciation of World's End, even as a boy," Rizzotto recalled. He said another man at Sunday's event told him he'd been coming for 75 years.

"The hills, the trees, the paths — you feel like you are in a different place in a way with no cars, no traffic, no phones."

— Lynne Layman of the Friends of World's End

"How marvelous to experience this place for that long," said Rizzotto, who said the event inspired him to learn more about Olmsted.

The Hingham Post Office has made three stamp presentations so far this year. In July, Graney and postal workers presented The Hingham Garden Club with commemorative stamps honoring American botanist John Bartram and his son, William. And earlier this month, Graney presented police, firefighters, and members of the National Guard and veterans with commemorative stamps "honoring those who serve."

About the Olmsted stamp

The issuance of the Frederick Law Olmsted stamp in 1999 ties in nicely with the 100th anniversary of the American Society of Landscape Architects.

The image of Olmsted that was chosen for the stamp is from a painting by American artist John Singer Sargent. Sargent painted the portrait while Olmsted, who was one of he founders of American landscape architecture, was working on the Biltmore Estate in Asheville, North Carolina.

According to Alan Banks, lead park ranger at the Olmsted National Historic Site in Brookline, Olmsted could not stand for long periods at that point in his life. Sargent painted Olmsted's head but had his son Frederick Jr. stand in for his body.

The stamp also features an image of New York City's Central Park, which was designed by Olmsted and Calvert Vaux. Around the edges are glimpses of plans for two other Olmsted-Vaux projects: Prospect Park in Brooklyn and the Buffalo Park System in upstate New York.

Ethel Kessler of Bethesda, Md., served as designer, typographer and art director for the new stamp.

The first day of issue was Sept. 13, in Boston. The postal service is making 42.5 million Olmsted stamps available in gummed panes of 20.

Olmsted tried to 'connect people to nature and each other'

By Alan Banks
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

We stand here today to honor someone who can truly be called an "American Visionary." Surrounded not only by the beauty he helped to create, but by the sense of community that he hoped would sustain these landscapes long after his own time.

I think Frederick Law Olmsted would feel honored by the issuance of this stamp; although he could be humble about himself, he was never humble about his work. I also believe that a postage stamp is a fitting way to honor him because ultimately much of what Olmsted was attempting to do was to connect people — both to nature and to each other.

Frederick Law Olmsted was both an artist and philosopher, believing his gift for design needed to be directed towards the benefit of society. Although he would not settle down to a career in landscape architecture until middle age, his desire to affect change was well established as a young man.

"I want to make myself useful in the world — to make others happy — to help advance the condition of society and hasten the preparation for the Millennium — as well as other things too numerous to mention," Olmsted said.

"There's a great work wants doing in this our generation Charley, let us off jacket and go about it!"

"I want to make myself useful in the world — to make others happy — to help advance the condition of society and hasten the preparation for the Millennium — as well as other things too numerous to mention,."

—Frederick Law Olmsted

His career path though, seemed to portend the roads he would later lay out in his parks — curving back and forth with no apparent destination. What he would later describe as a "decently restrained vagabond life" included work as a dry goods merchant, a farmer, a sailor in the China trade, a publisher, and perhaps most notably, a successful career as a journalist and author. It was partly due to his reputation as a writer that he obtained the superintendency of what would be this country's first urban park — Central Park in New York City. A short time later he would team up with a young English architect named Calvert Vaux and during the winter of 1858 they would draw up a plan for this 840 acres of urban real estate, a plan which they called "Greensward." The idea behind the design was simple — to create a calming eye in the midst of an urban hurricane.

On one level Central Park was to provide a real physical relief from the daily horrors of a 19th century city. If only for the afternoon, the city's poorest denizen could breathe fresh air and feel the warmth of the sun. Doctors would actually prescribe visits to the park as a cure for various ailments.

On a more spiritual level, it was to tap into what Olmsted believed was an innate ability to appreciate scenery. As a young boy, travelling with his father through New England, he said he first began to understand the power of scenery and how people were effected by it. By the time he designed Central Park, he had decided that the English Romantic style, which had so enamored him during his visits to Great Britain, would have the most beneficial effect on the city-wearied mind. This called for large rolling meadows, interspersed with close woods. Although seemingly natural, his parks were designed scene by scene to create a verdant, visual symphony.

"The chief end of a large park," Olmsted wrote, "is an effect on the human organism ... like that of music, (which) goes back of thought and cannot be fully given the form of words."

Besides the benefit to the individual's physical and psychological health the park would, in a broader social context, facilitate the idea of what Olmsted called "communitiveness," bringing people together from all walks of life:

"Young and Old, Rich and Poor, Jew and Gentile," Olmsted wrote, "each individual, adding by his mere presence, to the pleasure of all others."

This idea of public service was the cornerstone of Olmsted's design philosophy. Although he is best known for carrying this mission out through park design, he believed that all activities of a free democratic society could be facilitated through good planning. The firm that Olmsted established and that was perpetuated by his sons and associates, worked on more than 5,000 landscape commissions in 45 of the 50 states. These projects included parks in Seattle, Chicago, New Orleans and Denver, universities such as Stanford and Princeton, the Biltmore Estate in Ashville, N.C., and the grounds of the US Capitol and White House.

Massachusetts is fortunate to have the greatest number of Olmsted projects within its borders, more than 1,200 in 150 cities and towns. This includes such monumental projects as Boston's Emerald Necklace of parks, as well as designs for private estates, college campuses, and of course, subdivisions like the one planned, but never completely executed here at World's End.

Much of this design work came out of the offices he established at 99 Warren St. in Brookline in 1883. It was from this location that not only the business thrived, but also the profession of landscape architecture blossomed. Creating what he called a " grand professional post-graduate school," he sought out talent that would form the next generation of landscape architects. This group would include his two sons, John Charles and Frederick Law Olmsted Jr., and also Charles Eliot, the son of the President of Harvard College. Eliot believed, as did Olmsted, that society had an obligation to protect landscapes that were exceptional due to their beauty or historical value. In 1891, Eliot almost single-handedly formed the Trustees of the Public Reservations, which now honors both his and Olmsted's memory by preserving the land that we stand upon. The National Park Service sustains the Olmsted legacy by maintaining his home and office in Brookline as a National Historic Site and research center.

This stamp, in a way not readily apparent, reflects this obligation passed along to us. The image of Olmsted that was chosen is from a painting done by John Singer Sargent while Olmsted was working at the Biltmore Estate. At this point, Olmsted could not stand for long periods, so Sargent chose to paint Olmsted's head but have his son Frederick Jr. stand in for his body. The son, symbolically carrying his father's ideas into the 20th century.

Now as we stand at the millennium, it will be our duty to carry forth his vision into the next century. Is the idea of designing and preserving beautiful, healthful landscapes a noble one? I think that by standing here today honoring the man and his vision we have answered that question.

I would like to leave you with words Frederick Law Olmsted wrote as a young man, years before he had settled into the career for which he is justly lauded.

"What artist so noble as he, who with far reaching conception of beauty and designing power, sketches the outline, writes the colors, and directs the shadows of a picture so great that nature shall be employed upon it for generations before the work he has arranged for her has realized his intentions."

Alan Banks is the lead park ranger at the Frederick Law Olmsted Historic Site in Brookline. He made these remarks during a special "second day cancellation" of the new Olmsted stamp at World's End in Hingham on Sunday.

Lightkeepers' Memorial in search of funds

Those involved in building the memorial will need approximately $15,000 to complete the project before another winter causes a delay.

During the next two weeks, granite from India, Canada and Vermont will be arriving in Quincy for engraving as part of the Lightkeepers' Memorial at Government Island. The monument will honor Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, the two young lightkeepers who lost their lives when the original Minot's Ledge Light crashed into the sea, unable to withstand the vicious storm which struck the coast on the night of April 16, 1851.

Foundation work on the memorial, a lifelong dream of 86-year old Cohasset resident Herb Jason, is currently in progress. Although a fund for the memorial has raised $30,000 to date, its bank balance is currently a precarious $1,500. Those involved in building the memorial will need approximately $15,000 to complete the project before another winter causes a delay.

Tax deductible donations to the project may be made payable to the Antoine-Wilson Memorial Fund, % Cohasset Town Treasurer, 41 Highland Ave, Cohasset, MA, 02025.

Greenbush vibration mitigation

At a meeting with MBTA officials last Wednesday at Town Hall, town officials succeeded in getting the MBTA to put vibration mats in Cohasset Village.

The mats had been part of the MBTA's original mitigation plan for Cohasset, but had disappeared in a later version.

"The T had erred and will add those mats back in the center of town," wrote Tom Gruber, chairman of the Greenbush mitigation committee, in a letter to selectmen.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who also attended the meeting, said the mats will extend throughout the entire village, from Carousel Antiques to Strawberry Parfait. Still, she was unhappy with the MBTA's overall mitigation plan.

"We asked for very little, and we got less than that," she said.

Generosity of many supports teen garage

Project has received contributions from a variety of sources

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The doors to the new teen garage are expected to open next month, a tribute to the tireless work of both teens and adults who have been committed to the project since its infancy. An outpouring of support has also come from a number of individuals, businesses, and groups who have donated their time, money, or skills to support the teen center.

"The kids that were involved in the project impressed us so thoroughly that we decided to make a donation," said Ken Roth, president of the Cohasset Rotary Club. "Their approach was that they needed a certain amount of money to get going. We were impressed with their energy and thought it was a good idea. There isn't a lot in town for kids to do in Cohasset."

Many other non-profit groups in the town have been helped by such charitable contributions in the past. One such organization is the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, and president Murray Campbell saw the teen garage project as a chance to give back to the community.

"The Lightkeepers' House was only made possible through the generosity of a number of groups in town," he said. "We like to return the favor when we can by opening up the building to non-profit groups and by supporting those groups in town when we can. We got a good explanation of what was going on with the teen center and decided it was a worthwhile cause."

Some groups outside of town have also contributed to the project. Reebok contributed after hearing about the teen center from one of its employees, Joe McElroy, who has been active in supporting the project.

"We set aside money for community service projects with a program called the HuRaH fund (Human Rights at Home)," said associate manager Jeanne Connolly. "There are certain criteria that must be met for us to contribute, however. One or more of our employees must be involved and the project has to have a long-lasting effect on the community."

The youth resources committee would like to publicly thank the many contributors to the teen garage. There are also a number of individuals who have given varying amounts of money to the project, but the list is too long to mention in this format.

"Those individuals have been sent thank-you notes and their contributions are greatly appreciated," said YRC member Liz Bates.

The following is a list of contributors to the teen garage:

Businesses who donated materials, time, and/or skills: Joseph's Hardware, Hingham Lumber, Home Depot, Hancock Paint, Overhead Door, LaVita Tile, Brian Keating Painting, Cohasset Plumbing and Heating, Papa Razzi Restaurant, Designs Unique, Varrasso Plumbing, Reebok, Amex Sandblasting, Jamieson Electric, P.S.P. and Son Plumbing, George Haley Locksmith, Bulldog Enterprise, Keith Townsend Construction, Kevin Sargent Masonry, St. John Masonry, Stop and Shop, Dunkin Donuts, and Atlantic Bagel.

> "The kids that were involved in the project impressed us so thoroughly that we decided to makea donation."
> —Ken Roth, president of the Cohasset Rotary Club.

Individuals who donated time, effort, and/or materials: Wayne Sawchuk, Garrett Bradley, Ira Stoughton, Dan Volungis, Sue McNamara, Joe McElroy, Mary McElroy, Margo Aikens, Scott Aikens, Jody Butman, Frances Andrews, The Lagrotteria Family, Stephen Andrus, and Donald Staszko.

Town groups: Cohasset Rotary Club, South Shore Playhouse Associates, Cohasset Lightkeepers Association, South Shore Community Center, and Cohasset Plays by the Sea.

Town officials: Town Manager Mark Haddad, Building Commissioner Robert Egan, and the Board of Selectmen.

Norfolk County Sheriff's Office: Captain Dan Ferrara, Sheriff Michael Bellotti, and Captain William Draicchio.

How you can help

The teen center project is in need of the following:

- Cash donations for its operating budget
- Television set
- Nintendo, computer games
- Stereo system

If you can help or need more information, call Cohasset Recreation Department director Jack Worley at 383-4109.

Selectmen vote to make parking fees more of a deterrent bring to the town. Noonan said 1,362 tickets were issued from July 1, 1998 to June 30, 1999, while Haddad said the town took in $20,360 in parking tickets.

A public hearing to discuss the proposed increases was held at the selectmen's meeting on Tuesday, but only two taxpayers showed up to have their voices heard. Agnes and Joseph MacDonald, 49 Ripley Road, voiced their disapproval with the hike as unfair to Cohasset residents.

"As a taxpayer, I object to the increase," Agnes MacDonald said. "I work in Quincy Center, and most of the parking there is one-hour and two-hour parking. There's also a loading zone in front and people often park there as well. I don't think most of those people honestly know they've done anything wrong. I see their faces when they get tickets and they're dumbfounded."

Selectman Merle Brown doubted whether most parking violators are unaware that they are parking illegally.

"I disagree that people don't know what they're doing," he replied. "I think most people say 'Damn, I got caught'."

Joseph MacDonald said he thought the parking increases would hurt the very taxpayers who support the town.

"The citizens are the ones who pay for these roads," he said. "I submit very respectfully that these tickets not be increased."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said that

"As a taxpayer, I object to the increase."

— Agnes MacDonald, 49 Ripley Road

the increases will affect non-residents as well as citizens of Cohasset.

"The increases are not always designed to hurt residents," she said. "Most of the people who park illegally at Black Rock Beach aren't residents. A lot of non-residents didn't care about the $25 tickets at Sandy Beach, which isn't that much for a nice day at the beach. We want to catch the scofflaws."

Selectman Roseanne McMorris said the increases are not meant to punish citizens who honestly make a mistake when they park illegally. Those with grievances concerning their tickets can discuss those matters with Haddad, who acts as the town parking clerk.

"If somebody has a real problem and didn't see a 'No Parking' sign, that's what Mark is here for," she said.

The selectmen in attendance [Fred Koed was unable to attend Tuesday's meeting] were all in agreement about raising the general parking fine from $15 to $25. They did come to a consensus as easily on the issue of raising the handicapped fine to $100.

"I'd like to see a uniform fee, $25 across the board," Sullivan said.

Selectman Thomas Callahan made a motion that the handicapped fine be raised only to $50, saying that $100 was too drastic an increase. That motion was not seconded, however.

Callahan eventually voted with McMorris and Brown to raise the handicapped fine to $100, giving that motion the needed 3-1 majority.

Brown said that illegal parking in handicapped zones is the most egregious violation he sees.

"The handicapped violation is the one I see the most and the one I have the most gripe with," he said. "People want to save themselves a little time and then the people with handicaps have to park farther away."

Haddad said that the town will not profit from the increased handicapped fee, as all monies from handicapped tickets go to the handicapped commission.

Educators make case for a grade 6-8 middle school

nessey said. "They're characterized as early adolescents, which means that they're very social and like to work in groups. They like to explore subjects such as music and art and like working together in foreign language, science, and computer labs. The middle school organization appeals to the young adolescent and the research I did shows that the sixth-grader belongs at a middle school."

If the sixth grade were moved to the middle school, it is likely that the third grade would be moved to Deer Hill. That move would free up space for full-day kindergarten at Osgood, which is expected to be instituted by the state in the coming years.

"We know full-day kindergarten is coming and I think K-2 would work well at Osgood," Fennessey said. "I think 3-5 would work well at Deer Hill as well."

Malvey said because the state requires school districts to have a 50-year plan in place for the use of renovated schools, it is incumbent upon the town to be forward-thinking in its approach to education.

"We have to be looking at a vision for the next 50 years and middle school education is here to stay," he said. "We need to decide how the community wants to educate that age group."

By moving to a 6-8 middle school, Malvey said Cohasset would be part of a national trend.

"It's safe to say that a 6-8 format is the rule rather than the exception, especially from a perspective of age-appropriate development," he said.

Statistics gathered by the National Middle School Association [NMSA] corroborate Malvey's statement. In a 1993 study, 72 percent of middle school principals considered 6-8 to be the ideal middle school format. By 1995, 55 percent of intermediate schools were of the 6-8 variety.

Part of the recent shift toward that format, the Hingham school district switched to a 6-8 middle school in 1995. Hingham Supt. of Schools Dr. Gary Baker said the results have been encouraging.

"It's worked out very well for us and we're very pleased with it," he said. "The general consensus is that it's a better middle school arrangement than just grades 7-8. Sixth-graders have access to industrial technology and drama courses that they didn't have before."

Baker added that the move allowed Hingham to put three grades in its middle school, which he considered preferable.

"One of the primary advantages is that it gave us a three-year school," he said. "In a two-year school, the students never get a sense of belonging to a school. This gives them a better sense of community."

While getting a three-year school would be a benefit of switching to a 6-8 middle school, Collins said the main reason he supports the switch is the educational needs of the children.

"The program is the key," he said. "This would provide the sixth-graders with better educational opportunities."

"This would allow the sixth-graders to pursue their learning in more varied ways," echoed Fennessey. "There's a brand-new technology lab in the middle school and we'd have the opportunity to start teaching foreign languages at grade six. We want to open up as many doors as possible to these kids.""

Applications for local cultural grants due

The Cohasset Cultural Council is seeking applications until Oct. 15 to support community cultural programs and PASS, a ticket subsidy program for school-age children, as a result of a $3,300 grant from the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

The Massachusetts Cultural Council is a state agency that supports public programs in the arts, sciences and humanities. This year, it will distribute $3.9 million to 335 local cultural councils statewide which will accept applications through Oct. 15 for eligible projects taking place in 2000.

Individuals and organizations may apply for general support—projects such as workshops, lectures, exhibitions, festivals, and educational and artistic projects—or for PASS funding to enable schools and youth groups to take students from pre-K through 12 to attend cultural performances outside of school. Grants are awarded after considering the benefit to the community, the qualifications of the individuals and organizations involved, the planning process, community interest and involvement, and the population segments served.

Activities must take place in physically accessible facilities. For more information, call 781-383-9883.

Each community's allocation from the MCC is determined using Local Aid Formula. The local councils are run by municipally-appointed community volunteers who evaluate applications once a year based upon local needs and interests.

Senate passes a locally funded open space bill

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

If the state Senate has its way, Massachusetts communities will be able to take advantage of a new bill meant to preserve open space. The Senate recently approve the Community Preservation Act, which would allow local communities to fund open space acquisitions through new local tax options. The bill still needs approval from the House and Governor Paul Cellucci before it becomes law.

But the new bill comes at a price —a local price. The bill provides no state funding for open space acquisition. If passed into law, the Community Preservation Act would give communities two options for open space preservation. Municipalities could either charge property owners up to a one percent tax on real estate sales, or impose up to a three percent surtax on all local real estate taxes. Either option would have to be approved locally by a town meetings, city councils, or other forms of local government. Communities have the option of excluding commercial and industrial property, the first $100,000 of any sale, or 50 percent of whichever tax is chosen. Residents who receive abatements or exemptions would not be required to pay either tax.

The Senate bill would require communities to set aside 30 percent of the new tax for specific open space purposes: 10 percent for affordable housing, 10 percent for historic structures and landscapes, and 10 percent for open space. The remaining 70 percent would be available for general open space acquisition, or recreational uses such as improving local parks or maintaining other facilities.

"We are fortunate in Massachusetts to have an opportunity to decide how we wish to see our communities develop — to see that areas with an environmental or historic importance can be preserved for future generations to enjoy," said Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, a supporter of the legislation. "Every community has an area that residents of that community would never want to see developed."

"We are fortunate in Massachusetts to have an opportunity to decide how we wish to see our communities develop — to see that areas with an environmental or historic importance can be preserved for future generations to enjoy."

— Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth

When asked about the chances of an open space act passing in Cohasset, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he had no idea.

"I think it's a great idea," said Haddad. "But the selectmen have never discussed the Community Preservation Act."

According to an estimate prepared by the Norfolk County Commissioners, Cohasset has generated about $77 million in annual real estate sales since 1997. With a one percent tax on real estate sales, the town would generate $770,000 in revenue. But that revenue would further increase the cost of already expensive real estate in Cohasset. The Board of Realtors opposes the Community Preservation Act, viewing it as a penalty on home sales. Some real estate brokers fear that sellers and buyers would apply the one percent tax against broker commissions.

The Norfolk County Commissioners believe they have a plan that would raise open space funds without imposing new taxes. The Commissioners have been advocating their own plan, which would divert a current deeds excise tax from the state general fund to local open space funds. The state assesses a $228 per $100,000 tax when residential real estate is sold. Currently, the state collects about $62 million per year from the deeds excise tax. Cohasset has generated about $175,000 in deeds excise taxes per year since 1997.

The Norfolk County Commissioners' plan would have applied only to Norfolk County. For that reason, the Senate has tucked the bill away in a study committee, said Jack Dacey, coordinator for the Norfolk County Advisory Board. Dacey said he would like to see the bill resurrected and applied to all Massachusetts communities, but admits that will be difficult.

"The deeds excise tax generates $62 million a year for the state, and it's awfully hard to get the Legislature to vote for streams of revenue," Dacey said. "The Legislature prefers appropriations."

But the Commissioners are not giving up on their proposal. In a letter to all 28 communities in Norfolk County, the Commissioners are requesting municipalities' support for their proposal.

"We do urge you to thank Senators for inclusion of 'recreational use' in the Community Preservation Act, and urge state representatives to keep the new recreation definition and include our funding mechanism," the Commissioners' letter states.

HAMILTON COLLEGE FRESHMAN

Stephen Kovach, the son of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Kovach Jr. of Ripley Road in Cohasset, recently began studies as a first-year student at Hamilton College.

A graduate of Brewster Academy, Stephen was selected from 3,957 applicants to the college and joins a class of 502.

We wish you the best as you begin college life, and we are sure to be writing about you in the future!

WELCOME TO WILLIAM

Abby and Ken Greer are bursting with pride and they have a great reason for it — Saturday, Sept. 4, William James Greer was born!

William James, who is named after both of his grandfathers, was born at South Shore Hospital, weighing in at 9 pounds 3 ounces and was 21-1/2 inches long (certain to follow in Dad's footsteps and be a ball player, right?).

William James' maternal grandparents are Bill and Marilyn Adams (who are just thrilled beyond words) and his paternal grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. James Greer of Hull

Here's one little guy who is certain to be surrounded with love, and one we cannot wait to see! Congratulations to you all!

VASSAR FIELD HOCKEY

Elizabeth Pierson has been selected to the Vassar College field hockey team The team finished 10-6 last year, placed third in the Seven Sisters Tournament and qualified for the New York State Championship.

Here's to a great season, Elizabeth, hope to hear more!

FEATURED ARTIST

We are thrilled to report that Pat McCarthy is a featured artist at the Junior League Showhouse at the Commander's Mansion at the Watertown Arsenal, where she is displaying 12 paintings (you can bet that one is prettier than the next, Pat is an artist extraordinaire).

Pat's daughter Robin (Pelissier) is decorating two rooms for the showhouse (and is doing so with four little tykes under 6 at home! WOW!)

You can bet that husband/dad Jim McCarthy is extremely proud of his gals, as are we all!

DeLorenzos share yummy chicken recipe

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

"I did it! I got it! And Pam and Jack DeLorenzo said I could share it with all of you!

Every time there is an auction or a fundraiser, this couple volunteers to make an Italian dinner, they have become famous for their "catering." There is always a bidding war and the winner is a real winner, indeed!

Now we are all winners — may I present "Chicken A La Grotto," courtesy of the DeLorenzos!

CHICKEN A LA GROTTO

1 cut up chicken
1 pound cut-up sausage
4 slices of chopped bacon
4 slices of prosciutto ham, chopped
2 large sliced onions
1 large glass white Sauterne wine
1 small can mushrooms
Oil, salt and pepper

Place cut up chicken in oven with a little oil and salt and pepper at 275 degrees (first hour be sure it is covered), along with the sausage.

While that is baking, you can make the sauce — 4 slices of chopped bacon (chopped) and 4 slices of prosciutto (chopped). Cook in a frying pan with a little oil. Remove meat.

Sauté 2 large sliced onions, then add one large glass of white Sauterne wine. Cover with lid and cook at medium heat about 1/2 hour. Add bacon and ham and small can of mushrooms. Let simmer 20-30 minutes.

Remove chicken from oven and place in a casserole dish. Cover with your sauce and add 3/4 cup Sauterne wine.

Bake 20 minutes at 300 degrees.

Thanks, Jack and Pam, we will all enjoy this dish!

By the way, if you have a favorite dish you would like to share with us, please let me know — we would all adore it! Call me at 383-0560.

Siros to host animal shelter benefit

Siros Restaurant of Hingham is hosting a gala benefit for the Haughey Animal Shelter of Scituate on Sunday, Oct 17, from 2 until 5 p.m. The afternoon will include complimentary hors d'oeuvres, drinks and buffet. A silent auction and live music will add to the festivities. Tickets will be available at the animal shelter after Labor Day for a donation of $50 apiece.

The animal shelter, which serves the towns of Cohasset, Hull and Scituate, provides a secure and caring environment for cats and dogs waiting for adoption. The Friends of the Scituate Shelter raise funds for preventive health care such as basic tests, routine shots and other necessities. Funds are also used for a proactive spay/neuter program.

The October benefit is chaired by Dave Cerruti, an honorary member of the Friends of the Scituate Shelter Board and is coordinated with Kristie Henriksen, owner of Siros. The benefit is the first event planned by the recently elected board. Officers are chair, Jane Granstrom; vice-chair, Kim Gilsdorf; treasurer, Sharon Plourde; and secretary, Carole Coffey. Please call 781-545-8703 for more information.

Celebrating John Singer Sargent

John Singer Sargent (1856-1925), the great portraitist and muralist, celebrated this year at the Museum of Fine Arts and the Boston Public Library. Cohasset can celebrate him, too!

"In July (1890) Sargent was in Worcester, living at the Worcester Club, and painting five portraits...After a few weeks of July weather in Worcester, Sargent was grateful to escape to the South Shore, where he could relax with old friends from Nice, the Thomas Richardsons, now living in Cohasset, and lunching with Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett, whose portrait he was painting." (David McKibbin, Sargent's Boston, MFA, 1956.)

Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett were actors; Barrett had a house at The Oaks, across the harbor from Border Street.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

School facilities

In the weeks and months ahead, the school committee has the unenviable task of lobbying for public support for renovations and additions to the Deer Hill and middle-high school.

We say unenviable because we've been in town long enough to know that school buildings are a tough sell here in Cohasset.

As Rob Spofford, school building committee chairman, points out — renovating the Deer Hill School could have been accomplished as part of the new Osgood School package five years ago for 60 cents on the dollar.

As we recall, refurbishing Deer Hill would have cost about $4 million with the town being reimbursed almost 2/3 of that. We'll be surprised if it comes in at that price today.

Unless you're a newcomer to town, you will surely recall the acrimonious debate over the Osgood/Deer Hill project that failed at the polls. The school committee subsequently cut the Deer Hill part of the package and the new Osgood School finally won approval.

The educational process on the Deer Hill and middle-high school projects is just beginning. There are several options on the table (see related story, page one).

While the benefits of each option can be debated, there's no doubt the two, 50-plus year old school buildings are in need of a major overhaul.

As school committee chairman, Mark DeGiacomo said, "one would certainly hope that, in the upcoming debate, people will realize that these buildings need some very serious work."

Olmsted legacy

Thanks to the community outreach efforts of the Hingham Post Office, we had a chance to learn more about Frederick Law Olmsted, the landscape designer responsible for that slice of heaven known as World's End.

Atop Planter's Hill where the view was so clear we could see the blimp covering the Ryder Cup in the distance, a handful of local citizens were treated to a wonderful talk by Alan Banks on Sunday. Mr. Banks is the lead park ranger at the Olmsted National Historic Site in Brookline.

Mr. Banks said the commemorative stamp honoring Olmsted was a fitting tribute to a man who wanted to connect people to nature and to each other.

Mr. Banks pointed out that physicians in the late 1800s would prescribe a trip to New York's Central Park, which is another of Olmsted's designs, "as a cure for various ailments."

So if you haven't visited World's End lately, make it a point to. It might just be what the doctor ordered.

Cohasset Trucks with Character

Fourth in a series of what makes Cohasset unique

Patrick and Devin Kennedy pose in front of "Ralph", a well-traveled 1963 Ford, formerly a fire department truck in Marin County, California. Crossing the country in 1985, "Ralph" assisted in the courtship of Patrick and Diane, driving back and forth from Massachusetts to Ithaca, New York. Now vehicle of choice for Patrick's father and two brothers, the truck hauls brush to the RTF. The Kennedy women sometimes refer to "Ralph" in less than endearing terms, but the men love "Ralph".

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Involved in historical review

To the Editor:

In the Sept. 23 issue of the Cohasset Mariner (and Hingham Journal) you ran an article about the Section 106 permitting that the MBTA has just begun for the Greenbush rail restoration project. In that article, Alexander Macmillan, the Hingham Greenbush coordinator, was quoted as saying that Cohasset was not participating in the T's review of the rail impact on historic structures. This could not be further from the truth.

The Cohasset Mitigation Committee has been involved in this process along with the input from the Cohasset Historical Commission. A representative from our committee could not attend the first meeting, but made arrangements to receive all materials from that meeting. We plan to attend as many of the future meetings as we possibly can. Further, we will actively participate in the proceedings and monitor effects on our town.

The Cohasset Greenbush Committee is a committee formed by the selectmen to follow the train restoration and whose goal is to obtain the maximum protection for the citizens of Cohasset from the impacts of the train. Included in these impacts are the effects of train restoration on our historic structures.

Evolution vs. creationism

To the Editor:

Why should we be surprised that a few people are ignorant of all the evidence for evolution and cling to the idea that all living things are created in their final form?

After all, some still think the world is flat, oppose vaccination and fluoridation, and think tomatoes are poisonous. We even have a presidential aspirant who believes that we should have stayed out of WWII, presumably also believing that letting Hitler and Stalin divide up Europe and Asia wouldn't do us any long-term harm. Ignorance of the evidence is only part of the explanation for delusionary conclusions, faulty reasoning is also to blame. And sometimes there is a fine line between dogmatic religiosity and superstition.
